LIPTON IS ATTACKED BY MANIAC

LONDON, Jan. 21.—Sir Thomas Lipton had a narrow escape from death when a lunatic threatened his life with a razor unless a large sum of money was paid to him. Sir Thomas escaped through his own presence of mind, using the telephone under a subterfuge and calling the police, who placed his assailant under arrest. The lunatic called at the Lipton residence to-day, telling them that he was a detective from Scotland Yard.

"I must see Sir Thomas Lipton at once," declared the man. "His life has been threatened, and it is necessary that I communicate with him without delay."

The supposed detective was admitted and presently Sir Thomas entered the room. As soon as the famous merchant and yachtsman was in the room the maniac dropped his disguise. He sprang between Sir Thomas and the door and drew a razor from his pocket, flourishing this in the face of the nobleman he cried:

"I must have money. Give me £1,000 once or I will cut your throat."

Goes to a Telephone.

Backing away, Sir Thomas said: "I haven't the money with me now."

"Get it immediately, or you are a dead man," exclaimed the lunatic.

Sir Thomas declared that if he could use the telephone he would summon a messenger from the bank with the money. The man consented to this, and Lipton passed to another part of the room, where there was a telephone. However, instead of calling up a bank he got into communication with Scotland Yard, asking that officers be sent at once. Then he offered his visitor a cigar, saying that the money would be soon at hand.

Maniac Resumes Attack.

Detectives soon reached the house accompanied by several policemen. As one of the men in civilian's clothing entered the room Sir Thomas exclaimed: "Here is the messenger now."

The detective walked toward the maniac as though to hand him the money. As he did so another of the officers entered the room and the lunatic became suspicious. Springing back he again drew his razor, but before he could use it the officers pounced upon him and bore him to the floor. He struggled furiously, but soon subsided when the other policemen got active. He was locked up and will be remanded to an insane asylum.

SCOT NOT SAE CANNY AS CONFIDENCE MAN

Bruce Glisen is a Scotchman, born and bred, but he imperilled the reputation of his countrymen for "canniness" when he permitted a confidence man to work an old, old game on him in this city. Gibson and his wife arrived from Montreal and were to sail on the Pretorian for Glasgow. On the way to the liner Gibson met a man who persuaded him they had met before and soon had won the Scotchman's confidence to such an extent that the latter volunteered to lend his new acquaintance enough to make up for a sudden shortage on a bill he had to pay. "Never again," said Gibson, when he realized how he had been done.

ARMOR PLATE DELAYS WORK ON THE MAINE

HAVANA, Jan. 21.—Work about the wreck of the Maine is impeded, owing to the fact that a portion of the armor plate found lies in the way of one of the cofferdams that are being erected. Efforts to lift the plate have failed. A diver, who made an inspection, has informed the engineers that it will be necessary to dredge the mud.

MOTORMAN IS ACQUITTED.

FIVE PERISH IN TORONTO FIRE

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 21.—Five persons met their death and another was taken to the Western Hospital probably fatally burned as the result of a fire which destroyed the residence of Percy Brooks, manager of the Fairbanks Scale Company of Toronto, at 453 Indian Road, early today. While the cause of the fire is a matter of uncertainty, it is believed to have been due to a defective furnace.

Percy Brooks, the husband and father of four of the victims, is at present in Chicago. The fire was first discovered by a neighbor, who lives across the road. He was returning from a party and noticed the blaze and turned in an alarm.

The victims were Mrs. Percy Brooks, three children, Percy, aged five years; George, aged three, and Woodie, aged two, and a Scotch servant, who had been with the family since January 1. Another servant, a nurse girl, Maggie McAlden, was taken to the hospital, badly burned about the head and arms.

BANKER Z. W. CROWSEN WAIVES EXAMINATION

WESTFIELD, Jan. 19.—Zelenus W. Crowsen, former treasurer of the Westfield Savings Bank, who confessed to taking $50,000 from the bank's funds, was arraigned in the local police court before Judge W. S. Kellogg, charged with making false returns to the Bank Commissioner in seven counts. By agreement of counsel he waived examination, probable cause was found and he was held for the Superior Court under his present bail, $10,500. He will appear before that court in Springfield May 1. The books of the Westfield Savings Bank have been gone over now. The amount of the shortage is $55,000. The examination proves that Crowsen did not take any money after 1909, in his confession he said that he put money up to that time to care for his aged parents.

ELEVATED LOSES STATIONS APPEAL

The Massachusetts Board of Railroad Commissioners decided against the Boston Elevated in its petition to have the ruling of the Boston Transit Commission set aside. The Transit Commission decided that there would be force stations in the Riverbank subway, one at Massachusetts avenue, one at Dartmouth street, and one at Charles street. The Elevated wanted but the Transit Commission to-day upholds the Transit Commission.

STUDENTS CAPTURE A COLLEGE BURGLAR

FITCHBURG, Jan. 21.—Walter W. Kingston, thirty years old, a graduate of the Harvard Scientific School, was in court today, charged with burglary, following his capture at the hands of several students at the Cushing Academy at Ashburnham. Kingston pleaded guilty and was held in $1,000 for the Grand Jury. Kingston had charge of the lighting at the academy. For some time the teachers and pupils have missed money. A number of the props secreted themselves and when Kingston appeared caught him.

SCHOONER BRINGS 45,000 POUNDS FISH

The fishing schooner Bebilna P. Domingo reached port to-day with one of the largest cargoes of the season, which brought in 45,000 pounds of fish from the banks. This is the third trip that this vessel has made this week. Each member of the crew will receive $35 for his share in this week's voyage. The schooner Jeffie Costa reached port to-day after a ten days trip with 30,000 pounds on board, or fifty cents per man.

FITCHBURG'S MAYOR IS ILL FROM FALL

FITCHBURG, Jan. 21.—Mayor O'Connell is in a serious condition at his home as a result of a fall while playing handball at the Y. M. C. A. It was at first thought his skull had been fractured, but an examination showed he was suffering from concussion of the brain. Mayor O'Connell is a graduate of Boston University, where he played on the baseball team.

FRAUD CASE GOES OVER.

United States Commissioner Hayes to-day continued the case of Charles H. Burt of Walpole, accused of using the mails in a scheme to defraud, until January 27. Burt was ordered held in $500. He was arrested on complaint of W. F. Cobb & Co. of Franklin, who said Burt died with them fake orders for goods and then tried to collect commissions.

DRAG POND FOR MISSING GIRL

In the belief that Florence Whittier, thirteen years old, and a distant relative of the famous poet, is wandering about in Central Massachusetts, her mind partially deranged by excessive study, detectives in the employ of her father, who lives in Ipswich, are searching for the girl in Worcester County to-day. At the same time a large party organized by Mr. Whittier is making a thorough search of Ipswich, and especially the ponds and streams, in the belief that she may have ended her life while temporarily insane.

Information that a girl answering in many particulars the description of Miss Whittier had been seen in Spencer came to the family in a letter from a resident of Worcester, which read as follows:

Girl Acted Queerly.

"I read in a Boston newspaper this morning of your daughter's disappearance and it brought to my mind a young lady who rode on a car with me from Worcester to Spencer. I think it was last Sunday, but it passed my mind. She certainly answers the description you sent out. The girl boarded the car at Park street, and I noticed she walked funny at the time, but it passed my mind. She was dressed in a long gray coat, velvet collar and cuffs, and had a good school bag. On the third collection she acted funny. When the conductor went to collect her fare she seemed dazed or dazed, or something similar. The conductor asked her three times for her fare and then had to shove her a five-cent piece before he got it. She seemed startled. To tell the truth, the opinion I formed at the time was that her mind was wandering and that she did not know what she was doing or where she was going. She acted as though she had studied to hard or had been sit on the head with something."

Continue Boston Search.

Many of Miss Whittier's young friends in Ipswich are beginning to believe that the girl's mind has been affected by study. It is recalled by some of them that when she was a pupil in the Ipswich High School three years ago she became despondent for a time at the failure to get along as fast with some of her lessons as other girls in her class, and that she locked herself in her room and refused to return to the school for several days.

To some of her fellow pupils in the commercial school she was attending in this city she is said to have confided her distaste for business life and to have told them that her ambition was to become a trained nurse.

TROOPS MARCH TO BATTLE IN HAYTI

PORT AU PRINCE, Hayti, Jan. 21.—A battle between Haytien and Dominican troops is almost unavoidable at Saltion, Hayti, to-day. Dominican troops have crossed the Southern frontier and are reported within a short distance of Saltion. They have occupied Grand Goder. Probabilities are that the Dominicans will get the worst of any battle. While they are possessed of indomitable courage, it is understood that they are greatly outnumbered.

The trouble between the two countries is over the boundary line and there has been more or less trouble in that respect since 1777, when the land was claimed by Spain and France.

"SAPROPHYTES!" SAID GOVERNOR

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 21.—Because Governor Osborn in his inaugural message referred to saloonists as "saprophytes," several legislators have been trying to use big words. The Governor called when Senator Murfin called him a "political Cagliostro." I don't mind being called names," said Governor Osborn, "but I don't like them mispronounced. Cagliostro is pronounced 'Cal-yos-tro,' and as he was an Italian count who stole a necklace, I can't quite see how he fits me anyway."

SIX CHINESE ARE DEPORTED

Six Chinese were deported on the Enid Liner A. W. Perry when that steamship sailed for Halifax this noon. Among those were Mrs. Wong She and Miss Lem Haw. They are respectively twenty-five and sixteen years old, and the wife and daughter of Lem Wah, a wealthy Chinese merchant in business in Mott street, New York.

The woman, he says, is his second wife and the girl his daughter by his first. They have been detained at the immigration station since December 16, and are a very interesting couple. The four Chinamen deported in their company are regarded as unimportant persons in their eyes. They have either ignored them entirely or treated them with chilling condescension. The Chinese women have also held aloof from all immigration office attaches. They are high class Chinese and feel themselves above even Uncle Sam's hired people.

The woman and the girl were very rich and beautiful garments and spent about two hours every morning making toilets. After they had beautified themselves they kept as much as possible out of sight, which puzzled Americans around the station.

Wong She was released admission to the United States, because Lem Wah failed to convince officials that his first wife is dead and that he had a legal right to marry again. There is a question as to his paternity in the case of Lem Haw.

The New York merchant is going to wed Wong She according to Christian rites when she gets to Montreal and then, armed with a British marriage certificate, will again try to get her admitted to the United States. Never before have as many as six Chinese been deported from Boston at one time.

FEDERAL QUIZ OF EXPRESS CHARGES

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—The Interstate Commerce Commission is soon to begin an investigation of the reasonableness of express rates throughout the country. More than 200 organizations have complained to the commission of the high rates. The board of review of the commission is preparing questions to be submitted upon which a decision will be based.

OFFERS TO SELL HIS OWN BODY FOR $50

CLEVELAND, Jan. 21.—Fred Beach, 60 years old, Civil War veteran and resident of Nottingham, a suburb of Cleveland, has offered his body for sale for $50. He believes his body would prove valuable for dissection because of a peculiar disease.

Folks in Lynn had better get the SUNDAY AMERICAN to-morrow. The ones that miss it will be sorry.

300 BRAZILIAN MUTINEERS SHOT

GULF PORT, Miss., Jan. 21. That 300 Brazilian mutineers were shot to death without the preliminary of court martial and that similar executions are being held daily in Brazil was the declaration made to-day by officers on board the British ship, King George, which arrived last night from Rio Janeiro. The 300 mutineers shot were participants in the second mutiny on Colony Island, when sailors and marines seized the fortress on the island and threatened to shell the city. Their bodies were thrown into the bay and eaten by sharks.

The condemned men, who were shot upon orders from President Fonseca, were taken to ten upon battleships and executed. The crews were lined up on the decks to witness the slaughter, and proclamations were posted in barracks holding up the summary justice of an object lesson. The King George was in the harbor at Rio during the second mutiny.

BIG STEAMSHIPS GO ASHORE IN FOG

LONDON, Jan. 21.—Lloyd's Marine Agency was apprised that four big steamships were ashore to-day. In a fog that enveloped the entire southern coast of England the Lincoln crashed upon a reef near Yarmouth; the German liner Bliss, bound from Buenos Ayres, went ashore near Portland and a collegram from Lands's End says that the steamer Astra, bound for New Zealand, was wrecked on a rock off Mouse point because of fog. There were no casualties, although the crew of the Astora was landed in open boats under great difficulty.

MISS WHITE OPENS QUAKER CITY OPERA

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 21.—The opera season under the direction of Andreas Dippel opened last night to a crowded house with "Aida." Caroline White of Boston was in the title part. Miss White's impersonation and singing won for her one of the most remarkable ovations in the history of grand opera in Philadelphia. Director Dippel was forced to respond with a speech to the numerous calls of the audience.

FEAR JUDGE BOND CANNOT LIVE OUT DAY

Judge Daniel W. Bond of the Superior Court is reported early to-day as still alive, but steadily failing, and his physicians say that his death is a matter of only a few hours. The veteran jurist, who presided at the murder trial of Hattie Le Blanc, continues in a state of semi-coma, from which he arouses at intervals.

REMARKABLE STATEMENTS BY SENATOR

Stands Pat in Method of His Election and Calls Murray and Curley "Friends on the Other Side."

Senator Lodge took a jump into the senatorial scandal to-day and made public two remarkable statements concerning the two Democratic Senators who voted for him. He declared that the two votes cast by Curley and Murray were "accidental votes"—whatever that may mean—and further he described Curley and Murray as "my friends on the other side who cast their ballots for me as a compliment."

In the second statement Mr. Lodge goes a little bit further. He declares that the "lumber interests" which are behind Senator Lorimer of Illinois—whose seat is in jeopardy because of bribery—are "trying to cast a shadow upon every senatorial election in the country."

Mr. Lodge is virtuously indignant over the "impertinence of the Montana Legislature" in passing a resolution demanding an investigation of how Curley and Murray came to be coerced into voting for Lodge. He says they were "accidental votes." "Ned" Curtis, the Lodge Republican boss in Boston, does not agree with Lodge. Curtis says he obtained Curley's vote for Lodge because he felt sure that some Republican Legislators had forgotten their "duty to the State" and would not vote for Lodge's re-election. It is a very strange coincidence that Curtis and Curley had copies of the same typewritten statement of how Curley came to cast his vote, in their possession and gave it out simultaneously for publication!

"IS IT MONTANA'S AFFAIR?" ASKS LODGE.

"Suppose votes were bought and sold openly on the State House steps," says Mr. Lodge. "Why should that even concern the legislators out in Montana? The action of the State Senate there is most extraordinary, not to say impudent."

Then Mr. Lodge goes on to give Curley and Murray a clean bill of health. An intimate knowledge of community built in nothing compared with Lodge's with-ness. He says: "The two Democratic votes I received are perfectly clear. There is no suggestion to the contrary in Massachusetts." This shows that Mr. Lodge is not an attentive reader of newspapers in his own State and does not know what is going on even in Boston!

Then Mr. Lodge explains further: "ONE OF THE DEMOCRATIC VOTES WAS CAST FOR ME ON ABSOLUTELY PERSONAL GROUNDS."

It would be interesting if Mr. Lodge had gone a little further and let us know which one of the votes was cast on "absolutely personal grounds," and what were the "absolutely personal grounds."

Mr. Lodge says, "That, I know." If so knows what the personal grounds were, he should take the public into his confidence. The people have a right to know, and Mr. Lodge should not keep his secret too long.

"The other vote," Mr. Lodge says, "was influenced from personal considerations."

Again it would be interesting to know what "personal considerations" influenced either of the two Democratic Senators and which one of them received the "personal considerations."

What does Mr. Lodge mean by "personal considerations?" The public has a right to know that.

And finally, as if to end the whole controversy with a merry ha ha, Mr. Lodge says, "Anyway, I did not need the Democratic support I received. My re-election was absolutely assured without them; I had a clean majority of votes on joint ballot within my own party."

Meant for a Stampede.

It is not, strictly speaking, in accord with the facts of the meeting of the General Court. Mr. Lodge did not receive enough votes to insure his election before Curley voted for him. The vote was taken in alphabetical order. Curley's name be-

2,000 ROUTED BY FIRE, 20 INJURED

NEW YORK, Jan. 21. Twenty persons were hurt and nearly 2,000 persons were routed out of their homes in a three-alarm fire which destroyed the five-story building at Nos. 114 and 118 Lorrin street and 181 and 186 Messerole street, Williamsburg, early to-day, doing $100,000 damage. Practically every fire fighting company in Brooklyn was called out.

The blaze was discovered in the fourth floor. Policeman Monaghan sent in the first alarm and aroused the residents in the vicinity. This section of Williamsburg is thickly congested and it was feared the flames would spread to apartment houses.

WINCHESTER PETITION LOST

A petition of residents of the town of Winchester for the installation of a waiting room at the junction of the Boston Elevated and the Boston & Northern lines in Winthrop square, Winchester, was displaced by the railroad corporations. The commission in its decision says: "While it is true that the cars of both companies pass this point, there appears no sufficient demand for a waiting room, as through cars are provided between Boston and Winchester."

GRAVES SEES CLARK VS. TAFT

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—The presidential nominations are to be made next year, and Washington has already begun to talk about them.

The Democratic national party has passed safely through its first serious caucus and is hopefully fronted toward the middle goal of 1912. The Democratic leaders at the capital are simply jubilant over the result of the first official conference of the newly triumphant party. Champ Clark is radiant with good cheer. Tom Bell, of the Ninth Georgia, who is to be the House whip in the next House, expressed the belief that the party's worst crisis is over, and even the published malcontents are smiling and serene.

For but for the struggle and rumor of wrangles faded into absolute harmony by a vote of 166 to 7 upon the dressed proposition for a committee on committees. Has the caucus elected a speaker by acclamation? Has not the ablest and most experienced of party leaders been chosen to frame legislation upon the vital question of the tariff? And had not the caucus of promised strife adjourned in a feast of good fellowship?

And so the hopeful Democrats and for undismayed Republicans the time auspicious to talk of 1912. The Republican plan is now that Taft is the one man. For the Republicans the prognostic is a simple one. Taft is the one great figure that looms upon the Republican horizon. The President so far has no opposition. Only "T. R." has been mentioned as a competitor. But no one now believes that the ex-President will compete. The opinion is general that he would not if he could, and could not if he would, get into the race. Besides he has twice declared that he is no candidate.

Taft Strongest In Party.

The President will evidently have a walkover in the convention and is perhaps, by his record, the strongest man his party would present to the people.

The Republican equation is a simple one. At least, so thinks the capital.

No, as with Democracy, whose rising sun just now illuminates the political heavens. The Democratic field of candidates is full and rich and ripe—full in members, rich in quality, and ripe with expectation.

But the process of elimination has been going on. The star of Folk has waned, for it is the unwritten law that a man may not hear as much of Missouri as his great partial justice permits. Gaynor is the churchyard with a silver cross upon his shining tomb. Gaynor is dead after many ing glory, who blossomed out of a night and opportunity and faded forever in the first hour of the morning because there was no integrity in his statecraft and no statesmanship in his law. Three great names survive the winnowing of the sheaves, and now for us in the front of the Democratic fort—Harmon of Ohio, Wilson of New Jersey, and Champ Clark.

Harmon, so far, has led the list of probability. A seasoned statesman, long-headed, balanced in temper and with an unassailable record, he has got to him been reckoned far away the leading candidate, but as the serious game has been formed, the opponents of Harmon are beginning to score against him. There are those in Washington who declare that Harmon spoils Cleveland—that Harmon harks back to the Conservative Democracy and really belongs to the Reactionaries.

Harmon No Progressive.

These are they who believe that between Harmon and Taft—both from ohio—the President would win. They maintain that the bulk of the Republican party is conservative as the bulk of the Democracy with the whose insurgent is progressive—that with a conservative Democrat against a Conservative Republican the chances for the Democratic party would be chilled to again and that therefore Harmon either be defeated by Taft, or, if elected, would not the Progressive Democracy for two consecutive terms of power.

Whether the enforce or not is a reason for the argument, it is a pon just now presented against Harmon of Ohio, and those who made it cite the way in which Carl Bailey "laid it over" him in enthusiasm a Baltimore, to proof of the fact that Ohio don not hold the heart of the Progressive Democracy.

Woodrow Wilson is the product of one brilliant and beautiful campaign, but of the new, eloquent and plausible voice of Democracy. His campaign was planned without a parallel in clarity, frankness and convincing force. Against the record against Wilson that he is the "scholar in politics," that he is a clean and brilliant theorist without the visible fruits of the tried an. triumphant executive.

Champ Clark, as stands in leadership as Harmon, and with more actual experience in governments than either of his great opponents, is the old liest growth new and luminous on the horizon. He awoke in a night to find himself freshly famous and full-fledged as a candidate. His unanimous nomination on the first ballot to the speakership by his party recalls the fact that the party caucus ballfed for a week before they could harmonize on Judge F. Crisp, the last Democratic speaker; and this united congressions, following a vast adverse struggle, emphasizing the long, able and faithful service of the Missourian to the fortunes of his party in defeat.

POLICEMEN HONOR DEAD COMRADE

Escorted by four officers and twenty patrolmen of the Boston police department, the body of Patrolman Stephen H. Delosh, who died Thursday at the City Hospital, after an operation performed for spondicitis, was laid in its last resting place in the New Calvary Cemetery. There was a short funeral service at his home, No. 63 Hadgen street, Roxbury, and a requiem mass at the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, Dudley street. The Elks memorial service was said at the grave. Three policemen and four Elks acted as pallbearers. The latter were Captain John E. Driscoll, Station 2, where Deloh was attached; Lieutenant Michael H. Crowley of Station 5, and Patrick J. Kelly of Station 6, patrolmen, and Sergeant Joseph F. Burley of Station 5.

$410 VIOLIN THEFT BY A LUMBERJACK

Unless sentence is suspended, Charles J. Cross, a Maine lumberjack with a nature attuned to music and a passion for violins, will serve a term in prison shut in by cold walls and bars from the things that his artistic soul craves. He has been found guilty of the theft of a violin valued at $410 from Gustav Dittrich, brother of Max, the Symphony conductor. The fine old instrument had time and again charmed Bostonians in Symphony Hall, and Cross, on hearing it, imagined wonders he could do with it. So he went to taking it away from Gustaf and he found it easy to steal the violin. He may be sentenced next week.

LAUGH ON CUPID BUT HE'S GAME

Once again Rhode Island law has the laugh on Cupid and the Peabody and Mrs. Lina Friends of Miss Mildred Foster, well-known in church and musical circles, and her cousin, Charles Hadden of Manchester, N. H., are joining in the laugh.

Miss Foster and Mr. Hadden, however are doing a little laughing themselves today, for they were married this forenoon and are happy even if they did forget that Providence is no longer a Greina Green for eloping Romeos and Juliets.

Under the law recently enacted in Rhode Island five days must elapse between the issuance of a marriage license and the performance of the marriage ceremony. When the present Miss Hadden left Salem on last Tuesday and went to Providence to meet her cousin, she was not aware of the new law, neither was Hadden. They planned to get married that same day and were thunderstruck when confronted with the edict. Rather than risk the ridicule of their friends at home, however, they decided to remain in Providence until the five days had elapsed and then wed.

Mrs. Hadden was organist in the First Baptist church of Peabody for many years and afterwards became director of music at the church, a position which she resigned when she became engaged. She was employed by the New England Telephone & Telegraph Company at Manchester.

Staples, the captain, rowed to the mainland, and was promised that a tug would be sent today to take Burke and his wife ashore.

SENATE SLICES SULLOWAY BILL

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—The Sulloway invalid pension bill will be amended in the Senate, making the increase in pensions to the old soldiers $14,000,000 annually instead of $45,000,000, as now provided for in the bill which passed the House. In this form it has a much better chance to become a law, Senator Crane says. This bill, if the bill is passed, will give to old soldiers, 35,000 of whom are in Massachusetts, only a very small increase in the allowance they now receive.

FEAR HARM TO EX-GOV. DRAPER

HOPEDALE, Jan. 21.—Officially denying that threatening letters have been received by Former Governor Eben Draper or by officials of his large factory here, the town authorities are taking every precaution to prevent the writers of the letters from carrying out their threats.

Despite the denials of the town officials, all of those of the Draper company, it is known that Robert Goodnow, one of the foremen of the company, has received letters threatening him with bodily injury, and that the missives also contained threats to blow up the plant.

Five special officers have been added to the office force and one or more of them is constantly patrolling the vicinity of the former governor's home at night. The others are guarding the factory property and a circle of electric lights have been placed about the works, so that it is considered almost impossible for any person to approach the buildings without being seen by the guards.

Since the receipts of the letters the employes have been ordered to leave the plant through the entrance, although four or five are usually open to them. The belief is that the letters are hoaxes, however by detectives.

The trouble at the plant began with the slashing of an eighteen-inch belt. After this belt in the lavatories were found broken. The vandalism was laid at the door of an employe of one of the departments in which wages have recently been cut.

Mr. Draper is in Rhode Island.

'BRINE MAN' AND 4 OTHERS AT FIRE

"I'm the brine man," said an individual, clad in overalls and jumper ans swinging a lantern, as he approached Chief Mullen, who was directing the work of putting out a $500 fire in the candy factory of C. A. Adams, at No. 16 North Market street, early to-day.

"You're what?" asked the chief. It was a new one on him.

"I'm the brine man," repeated the stranger, "and I want to know if the brine pipes are in danger."

"This isn't a food," said tae chief, "this is a fire."

Mullen finally discovered the "brine man" was sent from the cold storage plant to see if the pipes of the freezing apparatus had been damaged by the fire. Whatever that they had not been. The "brine man" left, apparently satisfied.

"If he had come from a brewery we might have been afraid of the pipes," said Mullen. But Mullen still doesn't know what a brine man is.

The fire, which appeared threatening for a time, was confined to the third floor of the four-story building which ranges through to No. 15A North Union street.

One of the features of the fire was the crowd it caused. Besides the fire apparatus and reporters, the street was blocked by three men and a policeman.

CRISIS OVER PRATT STATUES

A crisis in the controversy over the Bela Pratt statuary for the Public Library has been reached through the Art Commission appealing to Corporation Counsel Babson for an opinion as to whether the ornaments may be placed without the approval of the commission.

The library trustees have already gone ahead and given an order for a part of the work and have paid Mr. Pratt something on account, it is said. This was done without the Art Commission being approached in the matter.

There were protests that the Art Commission had been ignored.

The commission believes the work can't be placed without its consent. The library trustees say they will place the statuary where it was intended to be placed, that is all right and that the Art Commission may or can go to Faneuil Hall and rearrange the portrait there.

But the Art Commission continues to say nothing officially. That does not mean, however, it will not insist upon standing by the law. The Art Commission was not consulted when the Bela Pratt commission was given, and the Art Commission feels the library department is inexcusably careless when, having a granite frame full of books at hand, it fails to consult the statutes of the Commonwealth relative to the powers of the Art Commission.

Chairman Benton of the Board of Library Trustees, who is a lawyer of considerable prestige and commanding power, is acting as commander of the library trustees in preparing to defend the statuary against the Art Commission.

GOODWIN, SR., DENIES STORY OF $1,700,000

N. C. Goodwin of No. 89 St. Botolph street, father of Nat Goodwin, the actor, denies his son created a $1,700,000 trust fund by ante-nuptial agreement or otherwise for his present wife, Edna Goodrich, before he had been divorced from Maxine Elliott.

"I do not know for certain that my son did not execute a trust deed for Mrs. Goodwin," said Mr. Goodwin to an AMERICAN reporter to-day, "but I do know he did not do any such thing before he was legally separated from Miss Elliott. I am certain of this, because for years I handled a large part of my son's business affairs.

"Mr. Roth, the lawyer for Mrs. Goodwin in her divorce suit against my son, says Nat included in the trust deed among other things the income from the Lafayette apartments, which he owns in San Francisco. This could not be so, because I collected the rents from that piece of property for a long time after Nat bought it, and I collected them up to more than a month after his marriage to Miss Goodrich. It could not very well have done so had the property been included in the trust agreement the lawyer says Nat executed long before his marriage to her.

Ridicules Ranch Story.

"Mr. Roth, according to the newspaper articles, includes in the trust deed Nat's ranches. This is absurd, because it was exactly a year and two months after Nat and Miss Goodrich were married that I wrote me from San Francisco instructing me to draw all his securities from the Knickerbocker Trust Company in New York and forward them to him by express, as he wished to use them to purchase the ranches. I sent them by Wells Fargo express and have the receipts. Nat couldn't very well include in the alleged $1,700,000 trust property that he did not purchase until fourteen months or more after the date of the alleged trust.

"I notice that Mr. Roth puts the value of the Lafayette apartments at $250,000. He is also in error there, for they are worth exactly $100,000. Also, he speaks of the securities as being mostly State and municipal bonds. As a matter of fact, they were practically all railroad bonds or Steel Trust securities.

"Of course I cannot say positively that Nat did not execute a so-called deed of trust, but I am certain he did not do so before he was legally freed from his former wife and the many misstatements in Mr. Roth's announcement leads me to view the whole story with suspicion. It is peculiar that Nat never mentioned any such deed to me, and I have been for many years his confident in business as well as personal matters."

Ironclad Document.

The story as told in New York by Herman L. Roth, counsel for Mrs. Goodwin in her suit for divorce, is that the actor, who then was interested in several mining ventures, signed a trust deed by which $1,700,000 in real estate and securities was made a fund for the benefit of the then Miss Goodrich and that the deed was signed while Goodwin still was the husband of Maxine Elliott.

"It is an iron-clad document," said Mr. Roth, "and it will be impossible for Goodwin to break it. It is not a prenuptial agreement, as such agreements are usually considered, for Mr. Goodwin, being then the husband of Miss Elliott, was not in a position to make a prenuptial agreement with Miss Goodrich. The transfer of the property was a gift, pure and simple."

The lawyer incidentally declared that Goodwin had plenty of other resources aside from the $1,700,000 tied up in the trust fund.

When the testimony is concluded Mrs. Goodwin will also ask for alimony.

FIGHTS OFF FOOTPADS WITH BONE BROKEN

MIDDLEBORO, Jan. 21.—Edward Hannon, train crew at the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad station here, was held up and beaten by two men in the station park last night, and but for a stiff fight he would have been robbed of his watch and money. It is believed that the same two men entered the restaurant owned by A. W. Merritt near the station yesterday and robbed the money register of $7. Hannon was on his way home from work when the two men held him up. One man asked him for twenty-five cents, and whistled. A second man struck Hannon from behind. Hannon fell and one of the men kicked him, breaking his wrist. Hannon fought back and prevented the men from stealing his watch.

PET CATS MAY LOSE BEQUESTS IN WILL

AUDUBON, N. Y., Jan. 21.—Two pet cats for which Dr. F. P. Casey provided a monthly allowance of $10 for support in a codicil to his will, will in the opinion of lawyers, lose the bequest. The provision was made in a codicil that was contingent upon the decease of Dr. Casey while on a recent tour around the world. As the tour was completed the codicil, including a bequest of $5,000 to the Humane Society, is declared to be void.

HYSLOP ANGRY AT HIS CRITICS

Dr. James H. Hyslop, secretary of the American Society for Psychical Research, is highly indignant at the criticism of his work in connection with the society, contained in a book entitled "Studies in Spiritism," written by Amy E. Tanner, Ph. D., with an introduction by G. Stanley Hall, Ph. D., LL. D., president of Clark University at Worcester. Dr. Tanner is Dr. Hall's assistant in his work at the university. The authors of this book, which first appeared last September, reject the spiritistic hypothesis which is upheld by Dr. Hyslop and his followers.

It is not on account of this difference of opinion that Dr. Hyslop is angry. It would appear from reading the ninety-eight pages devoted to a reply and review in the current issue of the journal of the society, but for the reason, according to Dr. Hyslop, that they have resorted to "lying, distortion," "falsification," "misrepresentation," "mere fiction" and "misstatement of facts."

Says Veracity is Lacking.

"I wonder what sort of scientific and mental habits students are taught at Clark University?" says Dr. Hyslop. "Veracity is certainly not one of them."

While "Studies in Spiritism" was written supposedly as a result of sittings had by Dr. Hall and Dr. Tanner with Mrs. Piper, the medium, a large part of the book is given up to a condemnation of reports written by Dr. Hyslop.

"Throughout the book," says Dr. Hyslop, "readers are made to believe, not only in the sincere desire of the experimenters to test the spiritistic theory and to ascertain whether there was any ground for supernormal facts. The reader is made to believe that this is the primary object of their visit. But to show what a piece of constructive lying this is I shall quote one statement which must have been an unconscious betrayal of their real object.

"We had no desire whatever to obtain 'test messages,' my results from the published sittings having shown their triviality and dreariness and the impossibility of getting down all the remarks and other circumstances which might explain them.

Quotes Dr. Hall.

Dr. Hyslop gives this account of the circumstances leading up to the preparation of his review:

"It was perhaps a year ago or thereabouts that I heard from a friend that President G. Stanley Hall of Clark University, Worcester, Mass., had had some sittings with Mrs. Piper, and I wrote him to express my desire to see the detailed record, but it seems not to have been replied at the time according to the statement of his reply to me. Again I wrote a week ago and received from him the following reply:

"'Clark University, Oct. 11, 1910.

"'My Dear Professor Hyslop:

"'Every single scrap of the record of our sittings with Mrs. Piper has just appeared in the work of Dr. Amy E. Tanner from the press of Appleton two or three weeks ago under the title, "Studies in Spiritism." I have myself no one chapter in the book and also in the introduction given my views full vent, and I have not say that I shall await with very great interest your reviews, which I hope very much for the benefit of the cause will be as frank as ever you have been. With cordial greetings, I am very sincerely yours, G. STANLEY HALL.'

Charges Misrepresentation.

It is not a critical defence of the spiritistic hypothesis that Dr. Hyslop undertakes in his present writings; he confines his examination of the book to the statements made in it about his own records, statements and theories. His line of objection to the book is that it takes his statements and distorts them, or by omitting some thing of importance makes a different color to them. Views are attributed to him, according to what he does not hold. He says further:

"Dr. Tanner says I assume the possibility of communication with discarnate spirits, apparently or evidently referring to these experiments in identification of personality. This is not so. I did not assume anything of the kind. The statements made in those experiments fairly deny such assertion by Dr. Tanner, and I do not see how any person having the slightest claim to intelligence could fail to see this, especially when it is actually stated. Besides, I have in all I have ever written on this subject emphasized the fact that I do not even assume the existence of spirits."

SCHENK CASE NEAR TO JURY

WHEELING, W. Va., Jan. 21.—"Mrs. Schenk practically admitted to me on the night of her arrest that she had poisoned her husband. She said that she was too sick to tell me about it at that time, but promised to confess all the next morning. The following morning she maintained a sullen silence having in the meantime engaged counsel. It is fair virtual confession of here to me that is now keeping her off the witness stand."

Prosecutor Handlin with this statement, to-day greeted the announcement by the defense that Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk would not go upon the stand in her trial on the charge of attempting to poison her millionaire husband.

When court opened counsel for both sides expressed the belief that the case would be in the hands of the jury before night.

Mrs. Schenk Still Smiles.

Mr. Handlin said he would prove before the trial ended that the accused woman had submitted her guilt to him. Dr. S. L. Jepson was the first witness to take the stand to-day. Mrs. Schenk attired in the same tailor-made gown she has worn during the trial, alert and smiling, chatted with her counsel, while Dr. Jepson described the preliminary and perfunctory question as to his name and residence. Mrs. Schenk wrote several questions upon slips of paper and passed them over to her lawyers, then leaned back in her chair smiling.

Dr. Jepson declared that on his first examination of John D. Schenk last Fall he did not conclude that the patient was suffering from arsenic poison. He said cathartics were given. Dr. Hupp's representations he satisfied his belief. He further testified that Schenk showed symptoms of suffering from Bright's disease.

Mrs. Jane Hedges, the next witness, gave the first testimony the defense has got introduced to attempt to establish its assertion that Mrs. Schenk is the victim of a conspiracy on the part of the Schenk family.

"Last April Albert Schenk, a brother of John, told me that John had purchased his wife an automobile," she added. "He then said: 'I hope she breaks her neck in it.' Albert also told me that he would leave no stone unturned to get her out of the family."

Cross-examination brought out the fact that Mrs. Hedges was involved in a suit over property brought by Albert Schenk some time ago.

Attorney and Witness Clash.

"Be sure and bad yourself with all the information you can before returning to court," murmured Prosecutor Handlin as Mrs. Hedges was stepping down from the elevated witness chair.

"I didn't come here to be insulted, Mr. Handlin," cried the witness angrily, glaring at the prosecutor.

"Pray accept my humble apology, Madame," said Mr. Handlin with a bow.

"Accepted," exclaimed Mrs. Hedges indignantly and swept from the courtroom.

Dr. Best was then called to the stand by the defense and his direct testimony started. Dr. Best couldn't be found when court attaches sought him on the day Mrs. Schenk was arrested. Mrs. Schenk told the court when she was at the Schenk home when Mrs. Lasch was arrested, she substituted.

Mrs. Lasch declared that she was not called to the Schenk children when Mrs. Schenk was arrested.

Then the battle which followed on the admissibility of the answer, Mrs. Lasch was not allowed to repeat how she allowed to tell of a conversation which she had with Mrs. Schenk upon the subject of the conspiracy. The jury was excused while the arguments were in progress.

Mrs. Lasch said Mrs. Schenk was good to her children, that she taught them prayers and that her husband seemed fond of her. On cross-examination it was brought out that Mrs. Lasch had tried to divorce her husband, and to have Attorney Dan Phillips to Mrs. Schenk in her behalf, but she objected and the case taken away from her.

MOST UNUSUAL

The making of New Suits and Coats for winter now. It is unusual for manufacturers to make winter suits now, for they are making suits for spring—it is unusual for manufacturers to have an accumulation of winter weight cloths so late, but the most unusual thing is that one of the highest grade manufacturers should make these cloths up into three or four of the newest spring models—most effective as to coats—most effective as to the straight stylish skirts, at so low a price as to enable Chandler & Co. to sell

WED AGAIN? BAH! CRIES CARUSO

Enrico Caruso, the great tenor, who appears with the Boston Grand Opera Company within two weeks, is kept busy denying the report of his engagement to Miss Lillian Grenville, a beautiful and accomplished young member of the Chicago Grand Opera Company. A dispatch from Rome stated that the tenor and the Chicago girl would marry, the news being based on the alleged contents of a letter Miss Grenville had written a friend in the Italian capital.

While Miss Grenville was declaring that she could imagine nothing more delightful than to be the wife of the king of tenors, the great Caruso himself handed out some statements quite different.

"Engaged?" he queried himself. "To Miss Lillian Grenville? Ha! Who is this Miss Lillian Grenville? I never heard of her. There is nothing to this story, and, moreover, I am through with the marriage game and am wedded only to my art. In my art I find sympathy and understanding, but in a woman—NEVER. It seems to me as if this story were a good press agent stunt for somebody."

Miss Grenville sang a more cheerful note:

"I can find nothing more delightful than to be the wife of the king of tenors. If Caruso were to ask any woman to become his wife, I cannot conceive of her refusing him, but unfortunately I have met the famous tenor only once and that was Tuesday. I have not the honor of his acquaintance. I should much rather become the wife of Enrico Caruso than the wife of the King of England."

BERNHARDT IN "PHEDRE"

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt enacted the title role in Racine's tragedy, "Phedre," at the Boston Theatre last evening, with her own company in support. It was a remarkable performance of this classical French play and impressed the large audience deeply.

Mme. Bernhardt again, in her interpretation of this famous character, displayed her marvelous dramatic intuition, and once more showed that as a mistress of stage technique she is marvelous. She did everything with a finish which no other woman of her profession can, perhaps, quite equal. Her intonation displayed a subtlety and range of feeling which illustrated how much the human voice can suggest and convey, if handled with the perfection of a past mistress in the art of elocution. There was, throughout the performance, the display of a restraint which was one of the finest touches of her art.

There have been many interpretations of this character by great actresses, but it is doubtful if either Rachel, Ristori, or any of the others, have entered or delineated the moods and passions of the heroine of this play with more insight and breadth of intellectual vision than this gifted French woman. Her support was of a quality which Mme. Bernhardt deserved. The audience was stirred to enthusiasm several times during the performance.

AMATO GREATER THAN HIS ROLE

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

Pasquale Amato, the leading baritone of the Metropolitan was heard last night as Amonasro, in "Aida." It was the second appearance of the famous baritone this week, but neither George Dumont in "Traviata," the role in which he was heard Monday night, nor Amonasro are important enough to display the great qualities of this artist.

It was hardly worth while to bring over Amato when there are several local artists who are quite as satisfactory in the parts to which he was assigned.

However, under the exchange arrangement, the coming of the Metropolitan artists was scheduled long before it was possible to arrange the local repertories, which explains the use of Amato in "Traviata" and "Aida."

As the chocolate-hued king of the Ethiopians, Amato was extremely impressive in the triumph scene and sang with much expression and vocal opulence in the Nile scene.

Carmen Mells was again Aida. This is not her happiest impersonation, but last night she sang freely, tunefully and effectively, while her acting was thoroughly convincing.

The Radames of Zenatello and the Amneris of Maria Gay are known and admired, and they did themselves full justice last evening.

Doubtless the exhaust his admiration for the beautiful scenery with which this opera is produced. The splendid temple scene is only surpassed by its own elevated grandeur in the finale scene displaying the tomb of Radames beneath the temple floor.

In no opera house in the world is the great second act more magnificently staged. The entrance of the Egyptian army with its varied costumes, its trophies, and its captives, is a striking illustration of stage genius, and the massive choruses and great orchestral effects a tribute to Conductor Mornasoni.

NO $8,000 GILT FOR GILDED DOME

Nothing doing on that $8,000 estimate of Sergeant-at-Arms Pedrick for regilding the dome of the State House this year. Governor Foss saw the item before it got to the Ways and Means Committee and with one quick stroke of his trusty fountain pen eliminated it.

The Governor glanced sharply down at the regilding item when he was going over Mr. Pedrick's estimates and the item timidly and appealingly glanced up at him.

"The gilded dome is bright enough for another year," said the Governor.

"Yes, sir, but the gold heaters and gilders need the money," ventured the Item.

"May be so, may be so," replied the Governor, carefully poising his pen for a fatal stroke, "but this high cost of living has got to stop somewhere and we can't let it get as high as the State House dome.

"And then, again," he went on, wickedly prolonging the agony of the regilding item, "you know there are so many bright men at the State House this year that it really would be superfluous to spend $8,000 just to make the gilded dome a little gilder. Guess you'll have to go."

And it was all over in the next instant. The Governor's fountain pen also slashed $5,000 from the estimates of the State Board of Conciliation and Arbitration, and $1,000 from that of the Secretary of State.

Total slashes for the day, $14,000.

MISS HUBBARD A DAINTY 'BUD'

The debutante ball of Miss Katherine Hubbard, the dainty daughter of Gorham Hubbard of No. 210 Beacon street, held at the Hotel Somerset last night was carried out on an elaborate scale, nearly a thousand guests being in attendance. Receiving with the "bud" was her aunt, Mrs. Hall McAllister. The cotillion came at midnight, Miss Hubbard leading with A. Hooper-Hooper, Boston's favorite cotillion leader. The ball room was sumptuously decorated with smilax and American Beauty roses and the supper rooms with palms and Killarney roses.

LODGE MAKES AN AMAZING STATEMENT DEFYING PUBLIC OPINION

gins with a C. Only a very few votes had been cast when Curley, according to pre-arrangement, started what was intended to be a stampede for Lodge.

Lodge had not even received a majority when Murray voted for him. The vote was in alphabetical order. Murray voted under the M's, as prearranged. When Murray voted Lodge had not been re-elected.

It is true that more than enough Republican votes were cast for Mr. Lodge than the constitution requires for election. But these votes came after Curley and Murray had cast their ballots.

It is also perfectly true that if "Ned" Curtis, Fred Emery, Senators Curley and Murray had to do the "job" over again Curley and Murray would not cast their votes for Mr. Lodge.

As Murray tearfully explained to a friend the day after Lodge's re-election, "I wish I had never seen the State House. I wish it had fallen to pieces before the vote was taken."

And as Senator Beveridge said in the United States Senate the other day in discussing the Lorimer case:

"ONE TAINTED VOTE MAKES THE WHOLE ELECTION FOUL."

MURRAY---CURLEY 'ACCIDENTAL VOTES'

The Globe to-day publishes the following dispatch from Washington:

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—The resolution introduced in the Montana Legislature yesterday requiring the two Democratic Senators who voted for Senator Lodge stirred up considerable comment in the Senate to-day. Just what the Montana Legislature has to do with the actions of Massachusetts legislators was a puzzle to a good many persons about the Capitol.

"Those two votes were what might be called accidental votes," said Senator Lodge to-day. "I had enough Republican votes to assure my election and two of my friends on the other side voted for me as a compliment. That is all there was to it."

Lodge Suspects Lumber Trust.

The following dispatch is published in the Journal to-day:

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—Senator Henry Cabot Lodge knows who inspired the Montana State Senate to receive a resolution charging that the Democratic votes cast for his re-election in the Massachusetts Legislature three days ago are prima facie evidence of corruption and calling upon the two United States Senators from Montana to institute an inquiry into the legality of that election.

The Massachusetts Senator says he is convinced the lumber interests of the country, which elected Senator Lorimer to the Senate, are now trying to research every Senatorial election in the country. By doing this they hope to help Lorimer out of his difficulty.

"I know," said Senator Lodge, "the source from which this resolution came. It came direct from the lumber interests which are trying to save Senator Lorimer. They are trying to do it by casting a shadow upon other Senatorial elections. There is no other conclusion.

"But what business is it of the Montana Legislature how my election came about?" continued Senator Lodge. "Suppose votes were bought and sold openly on the State House steps. Why should that even concern the Legislature out in Montana? The action of the State Senate there, as reported in the papers, is most extraordinary, not to say impudent.

"The fact is, the two Democratic votes I received are perfectly clean. There is no suggestion to the contrary in Massachusetts. One of the votes was cast for me on absolutely personal grounds. That I know, and the other was influenced from personal considerations.

"Anyway, I did not need the Democratic support I received. My re-election was absolutely assured without them; I had a clean majority of votes on joint ballot within my own party."

Neither the Senator nor his friends here take the action of the Montana State Senate seriously. They say Governor Pose has already signed the Senator's commission, and that nothing any State Legislature other than that of Massachusetts may do will have any effect whatever.

They say neither Senators Carter nor Dixon of Montana will pay any attention to the proceeding of the Democrats in their State, and the re-election of Senator Lodge will not be held up for a minute when they are presented here at the opening of the next session.

INTEREST IN LODGE CASE NATION-WIDE

"Is that Mr. Murray, can any one tell?
Is this Mr. Murray, who keeps the hotel?
If that's Mr. Murray
Who's made all this flurry,
Upon my word, Murray, you're doing —— well."
——Old song made new.

As the facts gradually come to light about the Lodge Senatorial scandal, which has become of Nation-wide interest, the great pressure that was brought to bear to save Lodge, regardless of consequences, looms forth with startling significance.

The two chambers of the Massachusetts Legislature on last Tuesday voted separately upon Mr. Lodge. He failed to get a majority of the vote in the House of Representatives. The Lodge forces, which means all the old-time, stand-pat Republican leaders of the State and Nation, were badly frightened, and they rallied to the support of the imperiled Senator.

"Ned" Curtis, collector of the Port of Boston, and the machine Republican boss of the city, according to his own story, sang into the Senator Martin P. F. Curley of Roxbury, who had been elected upon a platform pledging him to vote against Lodge.

Tried to "Land" Marchand.

Prominent leaders, according to Senator Michael J. Murray's own story, labored him to turn traitor to his party and the people, and vote for Lodge.

Murray is the proprietor of the notorious Hotel Brigham and owns one of the most valuable liquor licenses in Boston. One of Senator Curley's close friends, living in the same house with him, is Fred L. Emery, a Republican, and the "smooth albillean" of the Boston Licensing Board.

Willie Curtis and Emery, two of the political leaders of the G. O. P. in Boston were bringing to bear all the pressure possible to induce Curley and Murray to come to the help of Lodge in his critical position, other Republicans, throughout the State, were trying to land Republican members of the Legislature who had anti-Lodge proclivities.

One of the latter was Representative Marchand of Lowell. Mr. Marchand was a Butler Ames man. He had made it plain that he did not like Lodge and would not support him. Managers of the big mills in Lowell that had been benefited by the tariff law that Lodge supported last year, besieged Mr. Marchand on last Wednesday morning to attend the joint convention of the two bodies of the Legislature and cast his vote for Lodge.

Not only Massachusetts, but New England and the whole country rang to-day with the scandal that the election of Lodge brought forth. Few people believe that Lodge could have been elected if some Democratic support had not been obtained. While Lodge did have in the final vote enough Republicans to elect him, some of them were stampeded to his support. It is believed, because of the fact that they knew he had succeeded in capturing votes from the opposite party.

Representative Marchand was further questioned to-day as to the pressure that was brought to bear upon him to vote for Lodge.

Marchand's Story.

Said the AMERICAN reporter: "Mr. Marchand, will you give the names of the men who tried to get you to vote for the re-election of Senator Lodge?"

"No, the thing is all over now. Some of us members of the Legislature happened to be talking around, just the same as you and I, and I said, 'Well, I suppose if I would vote for Lodge some of you fellows would help me get some of my legislation through.'

"From day to day, the Republican members in favor of Lodge would say to me: 'Now, Marchand, you help us and we'll help you.' But I wouldn't desert Butler Ames if I was the last man in the Legislature to stand by him. Ames' private secretary is of French descent, the same as myself, and that is another thing that would make me stand by Ames.

"I was also approached by some influential business men of Lowell, who asked me if I couldn't see my way clear to vote for Lodge."

"Who were these influential business men, Mr. Marchand?"

"I wouldn't give you their names."

"Well, Mr. Marchand," said the reporter, "in a matter of such vital importance as this is, the public are entitled to the names of the persons who tried to influence you, or anybody else, to vote for Mr. Lodge."

"I wouldn't give you the names of these men. They were men interested in the mills, and it would not be right for me to give their names. They simply asked me if I could see my way clear to vote for Lodge, and I told them I couldn't; that was all."

"How did these business men approach you, Mr. Marchand?"

"They telephoned me at the mills."

"When did this telephoning take place?"

"On the morning of the day of the joint convention."

"Now, Mr. Marchand, why will you not let us know the nature of the legislation which you desire passed by this Legislature, and which prompted the Lodge forces to promise you aid in its passage?"

"Well, it doesn't matter."

Marchand After City Job.

"Is there any special reason why you will not give this information to the public? Is it of such a radical nature that you do not care to state its purpose?"

"No."

"Well," asked the AMERICAN reporter, "what harm can there be in telling us now. Isn't it a matter of record at the State House?"

"Well, I brought in the measure regulating vehicles to carry lights at night. I also brought in the measure relating to bail commissioners. Then, you know, I have asked for a new city charter for the city of Lowell. I am looking for something higher in Lowell next year.

"I voted according to the dictates of my conscience, and as the matter is now at an end, I would not say anything that would tend to hinder my chances in obtaining the office to which I aspire."

Mr. Marchand refused to tell what office he wants in Lowell next year. He served for two years in the Lowell City Government, and this is his second year at the State House.

Curley's Appeal to Democrats.

The fact that Senator Curley was elected as a Democratic candidate and asked for the support of loyal Democrats was shown by a circular which he issued in his district, of which the following is a copy:

Boston, Mass., Oct. 10, 1910.

Dear Sir:

Having received the DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION FOR SENATOR in the Eighth District, Wards 20 and 21, and convinced I can be elected, I ask you as a loyal Democrat to give me your support from now until election day Tuesday, November 8th, and to ask your Republican friends to aid me by their votes. This is a close district, but we can win this year if we work together. As a BUSINESS MAN for over thirty years in this district I feel that I can faithfully represent the BUSINESS INTERESTS if elected. As the regular Nominee I should have the united support of every Democrat.

Trusting you will do what you can for me, I am,

Respectfully yours,

MARTIN P. F. CURLEY.

It will be noticed by this circular of Senator Curley, which was headed "Democratic Ward Committee, Ward 20, 112 Dudley street, Dudley St. Opera House," said:

"I ask you as a loyal Democrat to give me your support." He also declared, "As the regular nominee I should have the united support of every Democrat."

As every regular nominee of the Democratic party pledged himself to vote against Henry Cabot Lodge, it would be pretty hard to see how Senator Curley could have any misconception of his duty on that point.

Says He'll Stick.

It was learned to-day that a petition is being circulated in Curley's district asking him to resign. When asked about his possible resignation to-day, he said:

"I understand that there is a petition being circulated in the Eighth Suffolk Senatorial District, which embodies a request that I resign as a member of the Senate. I wish to say to those who are handling the petition that I will not resign, even if every voter of the district signed the petition.

"Let my political enemies do their worst. I voted for Lodge because Ned Curtis asked me to. I did a personal favor for him."

A reporter, who called upon Collector of the Port Curtis, asked:

"Mr. Curtis, will you tell the public why you asked Senator Curley to change his politics and vote for Lodge," Mr. Curtis was asked. "The columns of the paper are open to anything you choose to say."

"Tell the AMERICAN I appreciate the paper's courtesy in coming to me directly with the suggestion, but I decline to go further than to repeat that when I saw by the carly vote that certain of the Republican members were forgetful of the welfare of the Commonwealth, I went to Roxbury and asked Mr. Curley as a personal favor to vote for Mr. Lodge."

"Will you tell the public the nature of the action of favor you had upon Mr. Curley, what you had done for him that he should make the sacrifice?"

"No, I decline to make any explanations in the matter."

DENIAL ISSUED BY THE LICENSE BOARD

The Boston Licensing Board gave a remarkable public hearing to the Boston newspapers yesterday, as a result of the Lodge election scandal. The hearing was extraordinary in many ways. For the first time in its history the board was on the defensive.

Fred A. Emery, the politician member of the board, confessed to the reporters at this hearing that he is possessed of a wonderful gift of second sight or clairvoyance, for he felt that the AMERICAN intended to "attack" him before the "attack" was published.

Mr. Hudson of the board—and Mr. Emery admitted that he is keener than Mr. Hudson—said it was an insult to ask the board questions about the licenses of Senator Michael Murray of Brigham's Hotel or about the license State Senator Martin P. F. Curley has tried to get out in Dorchester.

The hearing was the result of a simple inquiry by the AMERICAN for the dates of Curley's application for a license out in Dorchester. The request was refused. It took the combined efforts of all the Boston newspapers to get at the board and find out about how it feels on this Curley-Murray matter. There were ten newspaper men there, representing every Boston newspaper.

Call in Stenographer.

On a raised dais at the end of the hearing room sat the members of the board—Ezra H. Baker, chairman, Samuel H. Hudson and Fred A. Emery. Here is what then happened, with the questions asked:

Chairman Baker—Where is the AMERICAN man?

The AMERICAN reporter stood up.

Chairman Baker—What is it you want to know? Please write out the question. This question was then written out and handed to Mr. Baker:

"On what date did Martin P. F. Curley apply for liquor licenses?"

Chairman Baker—We have prepared a statement for you.

AMERICAN reporter—The AMERICAN would like to ask some other questions—shall it ask them of the Board or of Mr. Emery?

Mr. Emery—You can't ask me any questions, sir.

Chairman Baker—Send for a stenographer.

The stenographer came in and wrote down for the Board an account of all questions and answers.

American reporter—Did Mr. Emery or any member of the Licensing Board make any promise to either Senator Curley or Senator Murray in the event of either voting for Mr. Lodge?

Chairman Baker—Absolutely no.

Mr. Hudson—I think this is an insult to the Board.

Boston Transcript reporter—Aren't you men public servants? Can't we ask questions?

No answer by the Board.

AMERICAN reporter—The columns of the AMERICAN are open to the Board to affirm or deny any knowledge of this scandal as a result of the election of Senator Lodge.

Mr. Emery—Now, if what the AMERICAN has stated about me is true, I ought to be behind the bars. If what the paper has said is not true then somebody on the AMERICAN doesn't know his business and ought to get out of the newspaper office and be put behind the bars.

Emery Felt Attack Coming.

"I COULD EARLY SEE WHAT WAS COMING. I SMELT IT OUT—THAT THE AMERICAN INTENDED TO MAKE AN ATTACK."

Here Mr. Hudson interrupted to say:

Mr. Hudson—I couldn't tell it was coming.

MR. EMERY—WELL, I COULD. PERHAPS I AM MORE KEEN THAN YOU ARE. YOU KNOW YOU CAN SORT OF FEEL THESE THINGS COMING.

"I called up a man on the AMERICAN," resumed Mr. Emery, "the night before the first article appeared and told him that I saw what was being aimed at and there was nothing in it.

"It is true that I lived in the same house with Mr. Curley. But I little more than knew the man. As a member of the licensing board I made it my business not to be in his company toward the latter end of this campaign.

"I do not care what you use of what I say. Here is this board composed of three members. Everything that is passed upon here is unanimously done. One member could not give a license. Two are necessary. Always the three of us vote together.

"Is it common sense that one of us could go out and offer a man something that the others would not agree to? Besides here is a Democratic member of the board. Would he stand for such a deal? If one of us believed a Democrat to turn against his party and vote for a Republican and we promised him a license would the Democratic member on this board stand for that sort of thing? It is all foolishness."

Chairman Baker—Now, here is our statement.

Mr. Emery then read the following statement:

"Two members of the board," said Mr. Baker, pointing to himself and to Mr. Hudson, "do not know Martin P. F. Curley by sight, and the three members have no recollection that he ever appeared before the board in any matter whatsoever. When the chairman saw certain recent publications he requested the secretary to examine very carefully the records of the board to confirm or refute the above impressions.

"Each year there are hundreds of persons who visit the board to make various requests which could not under any circumstance be considered. Other requests are made which justify the board in advising the person making the same to fill out a formal application, which means only that the board will further investigate the matter through the police department and other sources. If the board believes that the application should be further considered the applicant is allowed to advertise.

"It is possible that Mr. Curley or some one in his behalf made a request for a privilege in which he was to be interested either as a licensee or otherwise. If so, such request was never considered by the board of sufficient merit to allow a formal application or advertisement and was not of sufficient importance to have resulted in any record being made of it."

The AMERICAN would like to refer the Licensing Board to ex-Representative Harry H. Haun, the well-known Boston attorney; to the Rev. Peter Ronan of St. Peter's church, Dorchester, or to Mr. Curley himself, to refresh the Board's recollection. Then, gentlemen will you give the Board all the facts of how Mr. Curley tried twice to secure a liquor license from the Boston Licensing Board, and failed because of the protest of the people of Dorchester.

And now the AMERICAN desires to congratulate Mr. Emery upon having a gift of foretelling what is about to happen, clairvoyance, or whatever it may be called. Mr. Emery says he FELT that the AMERICAN was about to attack him.

Mr. Emery, the AMERICAN has not attacked you. It has merely printed the current rumors of how a Democratic State Senator, who runs Brigham's Hotel, decided to vote for Lodge in a Democrat to the people who elected him and vote for your friend, Senator Lodge.

And the AMERICAN has printed the fact that Martin P. F. Curley, Democrat, also voted for Senator Lodge, and how Mr. Curley wants a liquor license in Dorchester.

LODGE SCANDAL TAKEN UP BY F. B. SANBORN

Frank B. Sanborn, in his letter from Boston printed in to-day's Springfield Republican, takes up the Lodge scandal and declares that "every financial interest of the millionaires has been worked for him here ever since the state election." In the course of his letter Mr. Sanborn says:

"Seldom have I known such difficulties experienced by the Dutch in taking Holland as during the ten weeks since the McLean, perhaps; BUT IN MASSACHUSETTS THEY HAVE RALLIED UNDER THE GREAT BANKING HOUSES OF ROBERT WINSOR AND HENRY HIGGINSON, TO THE RESTORATION OF A LODGE IN THIS GARDEN OF CUCUMBERS WHICH THE OLD BAY STATE HAS SUDDENLY BECOME.

Lodge a Minority Senator.

"In our city the majority, if they choose to call it so, is five or six. BUT MR. LODGE IS NONE THE LESS A MINORITY SENATOR, AND IT IS THE RULE OF THE MINORITY THAT HAS PREVAILED. IF HIS FRIENDS DOUBT THIS, LET THEM MAKE IT AN ISSUE IN THE NEXT STATE ELECTION—as in all probability it will be. They DARED NOT ALLOW A LAW TO PASS DELAYING his election till the people could be polled on the question. IN HIS MAJORITY TWO WERE DEMOCRATS FROM BOSTON, AND EVERY FINANCIAL INTEREST OF THE MILLIONAIRES HAS BEEN WORKED FOR HIM EVER SINCE THE STATE ELECTION. HENCE MR. WHITNEY'S COMING OUT FOR HIM; HENCE HIS SUPPORT BY EVERY INTEREST THAT MAINTAINS A COSTLY LOBBY AT THE STATE HOUSE—OR THAT HAS DONE SO. THAT MAY ACCOUNT FOR THE TWO DEMOCRATIC VOTES AND THE ONE SILENCE.

"But there were also a dozen Republican votes against him. Is it to be thought their secession from the machine candidate strengthens the machine's hold on the voters? Just the contrary will be the fact. INDEED, IT WILL BE RISKY HENCEFORTH FOR MR. LODGE TO MANIPULATE A CONVENTION; DANGEROUS FOR A MACHINE CANDIDATE TO HAVE HIS OPEN SUPPORT. HIS RE-ELECTION WEAKENS HIM POLITICALLY, instead of aiding him.

People Still on Guard.

"I hope the lesson will be sanctified to the Senator, saved as a brand from the burning. BUT HE WILL BE WATCHED BY THOUSANDS OF REPUBLICAN EYES THAT HAVE NOT CEASED TO FROWN ON HIM, AND WILL NOT.

"THEY WILL BE CAREFUL HOW THEY INSULT THE GOVERNOR, AS THEIR NEWSPAPERS HAVE BEEN DOING; they know his strength with the people, and they do not want him to get into the habit of vetoing their bills, especially their appropriation bills.

"The result in Massachusetts leaves the political situation and the chance for believing this year much confused. ON THE WHOLE, IT STRENGTHENS THE HANDS OF GOVERNOR FOSS, AND MAKES HIS RE-ELECTION NEXT NOVEMBER PRACTICALLY SURE. Everybody knows that the majority last November was heavily against Senator Lodge, and that he would have had little chance of re-election by popular vote. His rivals from this time forward will control the party; but for the present can only lead it to fresh defeat."

SICK BED ROMANCE ENDS IN $300,000 SUIT

CHICAGO, Jan. 21.—A story of a commercial romance involving thousands of dollars, as well as a heart, and business ventures as well as courtship, was related before Judge Gridley of the Superior Court in the suit of Miss Della F. Sharpe against Benjamin F. Graham, said to be a millionaire lumberman, for $300,000. The action, according to the testimony, began at the sick bed of Graham in the Auditorium Hotel several years ago. The suit involves timber lands worth $1,500,000. Miss Sharpe claims that she was a business partner of Graham. He declares that she merely represented him and that he paid her commission in full.

WIFE WINS PAROLE FOR SLOCUM CAPTAIN

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—Captain William H. Van Schaick of the steamboat General Slocum is to be paroled. He is serving a sentence of ten years in Sing Sing at hard labor for misconduct, negligence and inattention to duty as master of the Slocum. The boat burned in the water's edge on June 15, 1904, off North Brother Island in the East River, with the loss of more than one thousand lives. The President of the Parole Board in Washington has decided to recommend to the Attorney General that Captain Van Schaick be paroled. The parole will have been largely due to the efforts of the captain's wife, who was Grace Mary Specht, one of the heroines of the great disaster, and who married Captain Van Schaick when he was under $10,000 bail.

MOVE TO OUST HYDE IN NEW YORK CITY

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—Two distinct moves were started to-day which may result in the removal from office of City Chamberlain Hyde, whose long absence from the city during the legislative graft inquiry was a matter of comment. Charges against Mr. Hyde are being prepared to be filed with the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, while further charges will be filed with the bar association with a view to ousting him from practice. He will be called upon to explain his placing of public funds.

BANDIT HUNT ON IN HAVERHILL

HAVERHILL, Jan. 21.—A search is being made to-day for the two highwaymen who before shot Edward Verete, a distributor for the Grand Union Tea Company, on the road from Plaistow, N. H., and after robbing him of $48 made their escape. Verete's injuries are not considered dangerous and he is said to be resting comfortably to-day. It is believed the men are hiding in the vicinity of Plaistow and the police of that place have been furnished with a description of the pair.

NEARLY CHOKED BY TUBE IN THROAT

Herbert S. Call, thirty-four, of Tewksbury, is at the Relief Hospital, suffering from a disease of the throat. That he is living is due to the Gallows Side. D. B. Miller, Folk of the Hanover street station, who found Call choking to death at Commercial and Hanover streets, and sent him to the hospital. Call is forced to breathe through a silver tube inserted in his throat. He fell to the street and in failing the tube became clotted and was slowly suffocating.

TIGHT LACING UNDER BAN IN CLEVELAND

CLEVELAND, Jan. 21.—Health Officer Freidrich has put a ban on tight lacing among women. "Tight lacing will lead directly to a number of diseases," said Dr. Freidrich in issuing a warning to women. "While it is not serious enough to cause death, no woman should incr her corsets tightly." The doctor based the statement following a Columbus physician's assertion that tight lacing was not injurious.

BRIBE AND BRIBERY CLEARLY DEFINED

Here is the definition of the word "Bribe," as it is given in Page 180 of Webster's Dictionary:

(1) BRIBE.—A price, reward, gift or FAVOR BESTOWED or PROMISED with a view to pervert the judgment or corrupt the conduct of a person in a position of trust.

(2) To pervert the judgment or corrupt the action of a person in a position of trust by some GIFT or PROMISE.

BRIBERY.—The act of influencing the official or political action of another by corrupt inducements.

MORTON DEATH STILL MYSTERY

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—Apparently no motion is being taken by the coroner's office or by relatives of Paul Morton, former president of the Equitable Life Assurance Society and former Secretary of Navy, to probe the circumstances of his sudden death in the Hotel Seymour in West Forty-fifth street, although the denial of Paul L. Kleenan, an attorney, who his wife occupied a suite in the hotel, that Mr. Morton had an appointment with him for Wednesday night, adds a peculiar feature to the affair.

The funeral of Mr. Morton took place to-day, the services being held at St. Thomas's Protestant Episcopal Church. The body was interred in Woodlawn.

Deny Appointment.

Members of the family would not discuss the peculiar circumstances of the death. It was reiterated that Mr. Morton had an appointment to discuss business matters with Mr. Kiernan, but the latter, who had left for Chicago on a business errand an hour before Mr. Morton's body was discovered in the corridor leading to the Kiernan suite, absolutely denies such an engagement, and Mrs. Kiernan says she does not believe her husband knew Mr. Morton personally. Mention of Kiernan's name has also say they know of no business either of the firm's or Kiernan's which would be likely to involve a visit from Morton.

The Kiernan's live on West Thirty-seventh street, but closed their house for the Winter several weeks ago and took a suite in the hotel.

Left Only $2,000,000.

The physicians who were called in when Mr. Morton was discovered to be dying say death probably was caused by chronic spinal sclerosis, a form of degeneration of the tissues of the brain and spinal cord.

Wall Street has been gossiping about the size of Mr. Morton's fortune, but a close personal friend of the late head of the Equitable says it probably will not exceed $2,000,000.

Charles D. Norton, secretary to President Taft, is mentioned as a successor to Mr. Morton as president of the Equitable. It was given out as probable, however, that William A. Day, first vice-president of the concern, would succeed him. The names of George W. Perkins, formerly with J. P. Morgan & Co., and Gage E. Tarbell also were mentioned in that connection.

HEARS FROM EGG AFTER FOUR YEARS

PITTSBURG, Jan. 21.—In the bottom of a newly opened crate of "strictly fresh" eggs on the North Side, D. B. Miller, pure food superintendent, found a card bearing the name of a girl and address in Nebraska, reading: "Finger will please write." Miller and one of his subordinates write to the young woman and to-day a reply came: "I never did expect to hear at this late day from that egg," she wrote "it has been four years since I packed it." The Nebraska girl says she was working for a creamery at the time and supposed people are now wondering how long the creamery may have had the egg in stock before deciding to sell it.

SOME FOOD PRODUCTS ARE STEADILY GETTING REASONABLE.

The following prices are quoted from the grocery house of C. D. Cobb & Bros., con. Hanover and Union street, which are encouraging: Creamery Butter, 28c lb.; 10 lbs. Rolled Oats, 25c; 2 doz. Sweet Florida Oranges, 25c. We mention this house as it is well known, does a very large business and the people of New England know that their standard of quality is high. They have a free delivery system.

'BREAD' BRIBES IN CANNONTOWN

DANVILLE, Ill., Jan. 21.—Grand jury subpoenas to the number of 125, which some nearly every politician of prominence in Speaker Cannon's home town and county, have been issued. It was the initial broadside in Vermillion County's fight to purify the ballot, and the bare rumor that the jury foreman, Isaac Woodyard, was shaking the official plasters spread deepest consternation.

The Grand Jury is going to examine every man who has been a candidate for city or county office within the last three years about his election expenses.

The trouble in votes has been notorious for years. In the November election more votes were returned as cast for Sheriff Shepard than there are legal voters in the county.

The summonses will be issued Monday.

Vote buyers in this city have a system of their own, and unless there are some murderous fine grand jury will have a hard time in securing information on which to base indictments. No records are kept of the men who are bought as was the case in Ohio. There are said to be 2,500 of them in Danville alone. How when a man goes into the voting booth he is given a blank ballot and he must return to the buyer the one given him by the clerk of election. When he returns that ticket he is given a ticket calling for a certain kind of beef bread. If he is to get $5 for his vote he receives a ticket calling for a loaf of French bread, $2 draws a ticket calling for Vienna bread and $1 for rye bread. There are no names kept and no records of any kind.

PADDED SHOULDERS ARE SLATED TO GO

Sad days are about to fall upon men of narrow chests and spindle shanks, for this Spring will see an utter abandonment of padded coat shoulders and the peg top pantaloon. Well fitting coats and slightly bagged trousers will be the style, for so it has been decreed by fashionable tailors. It will be impossible for a man to pose as a broad-chested athlete unless he really has a breadth of chest that will show even in the new style coats.

HERE ARE THE 25 "MOST BEAUTIFUL" WORDS IN ENGLISH

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—A contest to decide the twenty-five most beautiful words in the English language, conducted by the West Fifty-seventh Street Branch of the Y. M. C. A. was won by John Shea, a lawyer of No. 416 Broadway. The prize was a flexible leather Standard Students' Dictionary. Twenty-one of the twenty-five words submitted by Mr. Shea were accepted. The words accepted are melody, splendor, adoration, eloquence, virtue, innocence, modesty, faith, joy, honor, radiance, nobility, sympathy, heaven, love, divine, hope, harmony, happiness, purity and liberty. Three words rejected were grace, justice and truth.

DIX ULTIMATUM IN SENATE FIGHT

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—With Governor Dix, Charles F. Murphy and William F. Sheehan all expected to be in New York this afternoon it was predicted to-day that a conference would be held which would pave the way toward breaking the deadlock that has existed over the election of a United States Senator. Democratic leaders here declared that they had information to the effect that Governor Dix was prepared to issue an ultimatum to Tammany Leader Murphy and his candidate, Sheehan, that he was ready to announce that the good name of the State and the credit of the Democratic organization demanded that the present condition be ended. Unless they could assure him, according to the reports, that Sheehan would win out in the Roosevelt vote he was prepared to demand that the former Buffalo leader withdraw his name in favor of some man upon whom all factions of the party could unite.

LIEUT. M'ARDLE IS REDUCED TO RANKS

Lieutenant Francis McArdle of Engine 2, East Fourth street, South Boston, who was demoted daily on Wednesday to be judged guilty of charges brought by a superior officer, has been reduced to the ranks by the fire commissioner. The lieutenant had a hearing on charges of insubordination, which were preferred before the hearing and while the decision of the commissioner is being awaited no efforts were made to save McArdle, but instead it is understood, insisted on publishing him.

TUTTLE GAINS DAILY.

Lucius Tuttle, ex-president of the Boston & Maine, whose left leg was amputated at the Elliot Private Hospital, Audubon road, last week, passed a comfortable night, and was well rested early this morning from the effects of the operation. Dressing and it still not be long before he can be discharged and removed to his home. His family cheers him by daily calls at the hospital.

RUTH ST. DENIS IS A BANKRUPT

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—Ruth St. Denis called cheerfully to-day on the referee in bankruptcy, Henry W. Reinhard, at No. 27 William street, and went through the usual proceedings of a person alone broke and not afraid to admit it off the stage.

"It's beads and things that has driven me to it," she said. Miss St. Denis admitted when interviewed at the New Amsterdam Theatre "And mind you, not for my own private, personal feminine adornment, but for my professional appearance."

"I don't care a hang what I am seen in on the street. If I need a warm coat I duck in to the first shop in sight and get it. If I see my shoes getting flippy at the toes I make the nearest shoe shop my own private, personal feminine adornment, but for my professional appearance."

"I don't care a hang what I am seen in on the street. If I need a warm coat I duck in to the first shop in sight and get it. If I see my shoes getting flippy at the toes I make the nearest shoe shop my own private, personal feminine adornment, but for my professional appearance."

but when it comes to my art—oh, I would sacrifice any personal desire almost to give beautiful, perfect performances.

"That's just what I have done. For instance, the jewels I wear in reality perhaps that this performance which I am giving with me more clothing than $5 worth of clothes, a few hairpins and beads and a pair of tights costs me $20,000 of my own cash.

"But for the ordinary extravagances of women I am not guilty. Clothes and jewels and big dinners and those things I don't give a rap for."

JACK LEONARD LOSES TO ALGER AT ARMORY

When you start something it's up to you to finish the job. Jack Leonard started something when he began to aspire to the lightweight championship. On the way up the ladder he licked a few topnotch lightweights. He went into the ring at the Armory A. A. last night ready to put George Alger of Cambridge so far away that not only could he not "come back" but there wouldn't be enough of him left to make a start back on his hands and knees.

To make a long story short, Jack Leonard got a good stiff bump in his lightweight championship journey. He was after Alger all the way, but every time he got near the "Cambridge kid" he ran into a bunch of stiff lefts and rights that finally broke Leonard's stride and Leonard fell through.

Lew Durlacher, Leonard's manager, coaxed and urged Leonard to put over a "K. O." But there was nothing doing. It was Leonard who went away back and stayed away. Colonel Dick Fleming, who refereed the bout, efficially called a halt on Leonard's upward journey by giving the decision to Alger, which pleased nearly all of the 1,500 fans.

Alger Earned Award.

Of course, they rooted for the Cambridge lad, but he got the decision on the square. It was a mighty good bout, nevertheless, one of the liveliest pulled off at the Armory A. A. in a long while, and it had the crowd on edge all the way through. They were not disappointed. This was the climax of the John H. Nelden benefit, and it was a rocking climax of one of the busiest nights of boxing and wrestling ever produced in Boston.

For two hours and a half before the main bout, fifty boxers and four wrestlers kept the crowd on the jump with a right-to-wind of sport. There were so many bouts that they had to put them on two at a time. While one pair were boxing, another pair were resting, and they kept it up just long enough to keep the gathering from getting bored.

It took three referees to handle the boxing alone—Jack Sheehan, Matt Flaherty and Dick Fleming—and two to referee the wrestling—George V. Tuohey and Herbert W. Cooke.

The program opened with Jack Fitzpatrick's midget pugilists in a three-cornered exhibition. The Flanagan brothers—they were even smaller than their predecessors in the ring—came to the bat then with a bout that kept the crowd in an uproar.

Stars in Exhibition.

Johnny Collins and Jack Tracey, both of Roxbury, the McGovern brothers of Woburn, Young Jack Johnson and George Perry and Johnny Golland and Young Lippo followed in order in three one-minute bouts.

Billy Nixon and Harry Connor, both of Cambridge, and Joe and Bill Whitney, South Boston brothers, followed in boxing bouts, and then came Ronny O'Brien and Young Connolly of South Boston and Jimmy Walsh and Teddy Murphy in boxing exhibitions.

Tommy Dawson and Jimmy Rothwell and Johnny Glover and Austin McGuire came next and were followed by the Young brothers and the Rolfe brothers. Then came Sandy Ferguson and Andrew Morrissey of East Boston.

Bobby and Ralph Tickle of Woonsocket and Benfield Walcott and Jimmy Lyons performed, and Jack Twin Sullivan then climbed into the ring and brought down the house by singing "Stop, Stop," and executing some dancing steps that were all to the mercy.

Good Wrestling Bouts.

Young Leonard of Chelsea won the first bout in the wrestling exhibitions from Jack Ferris of Newark by a head hold, in two minutes, nine seconds. In the next bout Ali Hassan and Amen wrestled seven minutes to a draw. Bob Somerville and Charles Beyer wrestled seven minutes to a draw.

Following the wrestling came Sheehan's Boxers, or the Coal Tots, in a battle royal. The members who battled were Pete Wallker, Belfield Walcott and three other darkies who were introduced as prominent referees and newspaper men. The bout lasted three minutes and was a riot. Pete Walker was declared the winner.

Eddie Murphy and Ed Hessell and Eddie Cate and Mike Conroy of South Boston, Tim Sullivan of Newburyport and Henry Hall and Young O'Brien and Tim Tracey then mixed it up.

Nelden Receives $1,400.

Joe Walcott and Arthur Ross were next on the card. Albert Belmont and Young Jasper and Johnny Lynch and Jackie Williams then got into action. Pat Rossi and Young Basell and Al Anderson and Joe O'Brien followed.

The club gave the entertainment with its own cost, all of the employees volunteering their services, and Manager Sam Cook of Robly Printing company receipted their profits for $1,400.

The testimonial was a rousing success, both from a financial and athletic standpoint, every seat in the house being sold out. Before the net receipts for Nelden amounting to about $1,400, at a regular benefit given Nelden in New York $500 was the maximum turned over to the fund for the unfortunate newspaper man, who is suffering from a paralytic shock.

It was one great night. It was one great success.

BIG TURF WAR IS THREATENED

A bitter turf war is threatened by the announcement of President Harry K. Devereux of the Grand Circuit board of stewards, that for the protection of Readville and other Eastern tracks, Columbus will forfeit its franchise, if the managers of racing in the Buckeye capital, persist in claiming the new dates assigned them in August, as given to them by the new Central Circuit managers.

Should the Western tracks persist in claiming all the dates that have been assigned by the new racing board that has taken over the control of racing in the Middle West, the most bitter kind of warfare is threatened with the Grand Circuit stewards, the parent organization.

The new dates for the second week of racing have been taken at Columbus with the knowledge that they are already assigned to Readville, and a conflict seems certain to develop, unless one or the other do not recede from their position.

Secretary Devereux has issued a most spirited statement, alleging that Columbus has been practically robbed of the Detroit was given certain racing dates, which were subsequently taken by Columbus, and that by taking matters into their own hands, a break is certain, and that the Eastern tracks must be protected.

With open speculation upon the Western tracks, and with everything related to a wager denied upon the Eastern courses, the managers of the former have for some little time been inclined to take the bit in their teeth, and the open rupture reported, when Columbus announced dates which are the same as allotted to Readville, surprised but few of the horsemen acquainted with the situation.

The Grand Circuit board of stewards, which will meet in New York, the first week in February, will thrash this matter out, and concessions may be made by both sides, but just at present the situation is most strained, and what will be the outcome of the deliberations of the masters of racing in this country is most doubtful.

LIVE BOUT AHEAD FOR SANDY AND JIM

Now that the big benefit is over, the fight followers who saw Sandy Ferguson and Jim Barry last night at the Armory A. A. are looking for a handling bout between the two heavyweights next Tuesday night in the same place. This makes the third time the pugilistic mess have come one another. The previous scraps were hotter than concrete sauce. There is no love lost personally between them, and the two scribes are sure to witness a rugged, hard-hitting affair. Three slashing good six-round bouts are also on the card.

WILLIE HOPPE WINS PHILADELPHIA MATCH

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 21.—Willie Hoppe defeated Jay Mayer, amateur billiard champion of this city, in the final block of their handicap match by the score of 400 to 305. Hoppe's grand total was 2,000 to 1,093 for Mayer. The terms of the match were that Hoppe was to play 2,000 at 18.5 against Mayer's 1,400 at 18.2.

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—Young Otto of New York knocked out Jack Savage of Brooklyn in the fourth round of what was scheduled as a ten-round exhibition bout was a furious one while it lasted.

HARVARD SEVEN PICKED TO BEAT TIGERS

HARVARD.		PRINCETON.

Harvard plays its second game in the intercollegiate hockey championship series against Princeton this evening, in the Arena. As Princeton has not had an over favorable season, and Harvard has, the Crimson stock is running far above that of the Jerseyites, and the supporters of the former team are looking for an easy victory.

Harvard has played but one game this far, and stands clear with a thousand per cent, while Princeton has been defeated by both Dartmouth and Cornell, and barely nosed out a victory from Columbia 2 to 1, while the Crimson defeated this latter aggregation 5 to 0.

Harvard is putting up a good game now after several weeks of hard work, and all its players are in the best of condition. Every one of the Crimson men are fast skaters, and the forwards have developed a great degree of team play and accuracy of passing, which is giving its opponents much trouble.

Princeton is credited with roughing it up a bit on the ice, but if the Tigers start anything like that hereabouts, they are apt to find themselves playing with but three of four men on the ice, for the officials in this vicinity won't stand for any unnecessary rough work.

Harvard plays a rover nowadays and points therefore with the speed of the forwards and the watchfulness of Dunnigan, who trails, little should get away from the Crimson attack, and Kalbfleisch, the Tiger goal tender, will more than have his hands full stopping the battery of pucks which will come his way.

The Arena is about sold out, with the exception of a few seats on the Princeton side, the right wing of the house having been allotted to Harvard men, who will be there in force, and a rattling good and enthusiastic crowd is looked for to help the favorites on.

DALE, TEXAS PITCHER, SIGNS WITH RED SOX

President John I. Taylor of the Boston Americans, has received the signed contract of Jean Dale, the right-hand twirler from the Lone Star state of the Texas League. Considerable talk has been made over this player, but as nothing has been heard from the comunbian, it looks like Red Sox for Dale. Cleveland and Boston drafted him from the Cleveland people, who, seeing the twirler to Sacramento. President Taylor bought the twirler from that club.

BOWLING TOURNEY TO START TO-NIGHT

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 21.—Sixteen five-men teams of one local league will start the five-cornered tournament of the American Bowling Congress tonight. The tournament will close February 6 and before the closing 412 five-men teams and more than 2,000 individuals will have rolled. The prize list amounts to $35,000.

COLUMBIA WINS CLOSE STRUGGLE

Although Columbia managed to pull a close game out of the fire and triumph over Dartmouth, the New Yorkers really had only the best of the 3 to 2 game, as far as the score was concerned. It was the Green's game, and but for the wonderful goal tending of Washburn, the former Harvard star, Dartmouth would have come out the victor.

TIGERS TO PLAY HARVARD NOV. 4

Harvard will play Princeton next Fall on the gridiron. The game will be played on the Tigers' own stamping ground in New Jersey on November 4.

Another feature of interest and great import to Dartmouth graduates is the retention of the Green on the Crimson's football schedule in its usual place, the Saturday preceding the game with Yale.

The athletic committee, at its meeting Thursday evening, decided tentatively on the part of the schedule thus far announced, but left the game with Princeton to the discretion of Coach Percy Haughton.

W. W. Farley, a member of the football advisory committee, and they decided yesterday finally in the matter. The schedule for November is as follows:

November 4—Princeton at Princeton.

November 11—Probably Cornell at Cambridge.

November 18—Dartmouth.

November 25—Yale.

The annual game with the Army at West Point, which was resumed two years ago, after having been off the schedule for two years, is dropped, as Harvard is allowed to play but one game away from Cambridge each year, exclusive of the game with Yale. The following year, however, as Princeton will then come to Cambridge for the football contest, Harvard will probably play the soldiers for a game on the Plain.

The game for football schedule was far announced and which is the most important part of the affair, should prove supremely satisfactory to the many followers of Harvard football.

The date selected for a game with Princeton has been brought about with no interference of other Dartmouth or Cornell, and all will go on happily in football relations between these colleges.

The Princeton date is peculiarly a happy one for Harvard, as it will permit the Crimson eleven to rest up for the Dartmouth game, as the intermediary contest, that with Cornell, is always an easy one.

The remainder of the football schedule will probably be announced after the next meeting of the committee.

RACE PROMOTERS BALK AT GUS DALY'S TERMS

Gus Daly writes from the Grand Union Hotel, Montreal, to the AMERICAN, that the attendance at the opening races in the Canadian city was about 1,500, notwithstanding a light snow fell all day. Speculation ruled good, and many American horsemen were present at the meeting.

The prices in the opening event, the 2:30 pace, last night, were as follows: Hitchie $25, Jennie Hal $15, Dinnity $6, Maxie Girl, Black Maria, Jap, Lady Gin and Master Hal all touched at $5. Total $85.

In the 2:19 trot, Margot Leanord sold at $10, Tubilee $8, Lady Brant $5, Mary Isabel Last Edition and George Kaplan $3. Total $26.

Gus is expecting to return to Boston shortly, as he could not agree with the Canadian promoters upon terms, to assist Ed Mowat in the sale of the auction goods.

JOHNSON OUT FOR 6 MONTHS

PITTSBURG, Pa., Jan. 21.—"I do not intend to fight for six months and will entertain no challenges until after that time," said Champion Jack Johnson when shown a telegram from Chicago announcing that he was to meet Al Kaufmann in London next April.

Johnson, who is here with a theatrical outfit, continued: "I quit the show business here in Pittsburg. From here I go to Chicago for a visit with my mother. Then I am going to San Francisco, where I will stay two months. At the end of that time I will probably start around the world, going either to Australia or London first."

Angered at what he terms "slashing impertinence" on the part of George Cotton, his former sparring partner, who challenged him to fight through the newspapers of Pittsburg, Jack Johnson put up a certified check for $10,000, which he will bet against $5,000 that he will knock Cotton out inside ten rounds if they ever get into the ring. Johnson looked about quite a bit for Cotton, who could not be found.

"I don't like men of the uncertain calibre of Cotton trying to get a reputation at my expense, but I will fall for his fellow just once in order that I may get a chance to knock his head off. He's in good training now, but I'll wager any claim to time to train if he'll only put up $5,000. We will fight for the stakes—all I want is one hour's notice for him."

RED SOX OPEN WITH HARVARD

The Red Sox will open the season here on April 12, with an exhibition game with the Harvard University nine at the Huntington avenue grounds. It will be the first opportunity local fans will have of seeing Taylor's men in action.

Last year the game between Harvard and the Red Sox was a big success in many ways and the Harvard boys were eager to meet the professional cracks again this season.

Business Success Through Publicity

No. 27

Advertised Versus Non-Advertised Lines

Advertised lines are always easier to sell than non-advertised lines. This is what a manufacturer of hardware found when he tried to introduce his hardware into New England. He had an excellent line and he offered it to the trade for 10 per cent. less than the price at which the trade was buying a nationally advertised line.

"Consider the profit there is in it for you," he said to the first dealer he called upon. "It's equal if not better than the line you are carrying and you can buy it at 10 per cent. less."

The dealer didn't seem enthusiastic and the manufacturer's representative asked him why he wasn't willing to put in the line.

"Why should we?" was the reply. "We are handling a line now that is widely advertised. It sells itself and we get more of a profit out of the quick turn-over than we ever would out of your goods in spite of the large margin.

"Who knows your goods? Nobody in this vicinity ever heard of them. You come to us and speak of profit. We reply that you haven't a market. Go out and make your market. The day's gone by when I am going to make a market for any manufacturer. I prefer to handle advertised lines, the market for which is already made and made by the manufacturer. A quick turn-over is where I get my profit, and advertised lines turn over quickest."

The manufacturer's salesman soon discovered that he could get his line into only the most unprogressive stores. To-day he is still struggling to market his product. Suppose he had advertised for the dealer in the local newspaper and directed people to ask for his goods, he would have created a demand the clerk would have jumped to meet.

There isn't a line of hardware that should not be advertised. Think of the thousands of kitchen utensils that might be profitably pushed under a trade-mark in newspaper advertising. Think of the mechanics and machinists all over the country that you can reach only with the right kind of advertising.

The successful manufacturer of hardware realizes that the best way to sell goods is to tell people about the goods, and the best way to do that is advertising in a local newspaper of large circulation.

The best paper in New England for reaching the greatest number of readers is the Boston American. It has a daily circulation of almost 400,000. If you want further particulars address Trade Aid Department, Boston American, Summer street, Boston, Mass.

SPORTS of all SORTS

THE RESTAURANT WHERE MANY Boston men who enjoy following the ponies take a bite has a new cook whose hair is so red that no Indian Summer moon that ever rose across the meat was even a fair resemblance. The old sport with the gold crowns blew in to find that the new artiste in her excitement in serving so many sports had forgotten to remove the pin feather from the muscular Percival. The fowl, who after a boil in the briny, had been dropped in the white paste, and unerged as "chicken fricasee." The old sport caught a good part of Percival's whiskers far back upon his gold crowns, and he was madder than Percival had ever been in his life when we'll, "Take a quarter for a tip, Muggie," but if Percival takes a bath in the fricasee to-morrow, see that he has a shave, even if you borrow my safety razor, before he starts his mid-week swim. Have some regard for the old line regulars.

IT LOOKS AS IF NEWPORT STANDS an excellent show of losing the National Lawn Tennis Tournament, after dominating the situation and holding the championship matches for thirty years. And a flutter there will be over the marmalade and tea, and somebody will throw over their out Cavendish to the thrilling excitement that now attends. A large number of tennis players prefer the grounds of the Germantown Cricket Club at Manheim, near Philadelphia. More courts are needed, with 181 players competing, as was the case last year, than the Casino, Newport, affords, and then again the outrageous prices charged at Newport for the eats and the vets have long been a rough place, especially among those players who come from the West.

Tommy now wants to annex himself to the stable of Carl Morris, the Oklahoma Giant, but the man from the alfalfa country says "Nay, nay, Pauline," to Tommy's siren noted plea. For passing the bill, Tommy holds out with the best, and no one ever beat him at this game, except Kid McCoy that night we were at Mapeth. After Tommy had swallowed the bull of a gentlemen's battle, with no visions to disarrange even the studs upon a three-decked shirt, how McCoy did come over with the double cross and gave Tommy the greatest lacing he ever knew in his life.

THE RETIREMENT OF JIMMY ROWE, the greatest American trainer of the thoroughbred horse this land has ever known, to make a season in England, is deeply to be regretted. In ten years the horses owned by James R. Keene and whose retirement is a terrible loss to the sport, won nearly $2,000,000. In 1901 the banner year, the Keene horses trained by Rowe, took down $250,000. And the famous Sysonby winning $144,380. But one thing is assured, if Rowe never get away from the laws of the Medes and Persians, Jimmy Rowe will come back to us again. Which is some assurance to lovers of the thoroughbred horse.

TWO FIGHT NUTS WERE TALKING over old fighters and their records the other night, and one said that the other couldn't name one old fighter that he didn't remember. "Well," piped the challenged one, "who was Gee Dawson, and where was he from?"

After the roar they explained to him that he was thinking of Dawson City. The real Dawson was from Australia. They served the vets on the wise one.

PAGE DENIES SHEAN TRADE

By SID WHIPPLE.

The story from New York that the Rustlers have traded Dave Shean, second baseman of the Doves in 1910, for Arthur Shafer, a utility infielder for the Giants, is emphatically denied by the Boston managers. There has been no such deal made, and according to the owners, no such deal will ever be made.

Vice-President L. C. Page of the Rustlers to-day gave out a strenuous denial of the alleged trade. He believes that the story came from somebody connected with McGraw, and that it was given out to attempt to influence the owners to make such a trade.

"I wish you would deny absolutely the story in the morning papers to the effect that we have traded Shean for Shafer. No such deal has been made, and no such deal will be made. As far I know now we won't let Shean go this season. So that puts an end to that report.

"When I read the story I saw how such a report would hurt the club, and decided to make an absolute denial at once in order to prevent its spreading further. Mr. Russell, who is in New York, will also deny it.

"We have absolutely no intention of making any such trade, and there is not a particle of truth in the story. We will keep Shean with us, that is unless somebody worth while is offered in trade."

As Russell and Tenney are still in New York, this means they are still dickering for players, and the end is not yet in sight.

YOUNGSTERS CAN'T OUST STEINFELDT

CHICAGO, Jan. 20.—No young third baseman fresh from the minors is going to beat Harry Steinfeldt out of his job on the Chicago Cub baseball team, this Summer, at least. That is what the veteran infielder wrote in a letter which President Murphy received to-day.

"My days of playing are not over," writes Steiny. "If you have any youngsters who hope to take my place at third, notify them to cease hoping immediately, as they have no chance whatever."

BILL McKINNON GOES AFTER CRACK BOXERS

Harry Taylor, the manager of Bill McKinnon, the Roxbury boxer, announces that Bill, who has been under a doctor's care for several weeks, is again in boxing form. He will begin light training at once. Taylor declared that McKinnon is going right after Jimmy Gardner, Frank Klaiss, Leo Houck and Tommy Sullivan. Taylor will post a forfeit for Bill to meet any of the quartet mentioned at the middleweight limit, and let the amount go as a side bet.

NOTED DRIVER RECOVERING

The many Boston friends of Lester Dore, one of the king pin drivers of the New England half mile tracks, will be pleased to know that he has recovered from a surgical operation, and will be about again in a few days. Lester is one of the fixtures of the race grounds here, and next to Walter Cox, the best known of New England reinsmen.

GOOD BOUTS AT HYDE PARK A. C.

Kid Shea of South Boston and Frank Perron, the crack lightweight from Rhode Island, will clash in the final bout at the Hyde Park A. C. Monday night. It looks like a good show. There is a fine card of preliminaries.

Shea's victory over Jeff Doherty of Lawrence, Thursday night, shows that he is a boy of some class. He has boxed against Dave Dewhirst, Honey Melody, Jimmy Moriarty, and other well known boxers, and has come out all to the good.

Ronse O'Brien, the boy from South Boston who used to be able to travel fast with some of the best of the local lads, will mix it up with Jerry Meskill in the semi-final. The fans are waiting to see if Ronse can come back. Joe Miley and Butch Carr should furnish an old time slugging fest. Both are hard hitters. The card should be short.

Tommy Lorenzo and Young Scanlon get the fifth in both East will be all to the merry. It looks like a good show.

BASEBALL FANS TO HAVE BEER

CINCINNATI, Jan. 21.—The prospect of a "beerless" season at the Cincinnati baseball park was removed when President August Hermann awarded the beer privilege for the coming baseball year. It had been stipulated that beer would be allowed to be sold on the premises after the close of last season. In awarding the contract it was stated that the order prohibiting the sale of beer on the grounds will not be put into effect until the completion of the new stands. The date of the erection of these has not been decided upon.

YOUNG DONAHUE AND BURNS DRAW

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—Young Donahue of Boston fought a draw with Kid Burns of New York at the Madison A. C. It was Donahue's strong finish in the final round that gave him a chance to even the score with Burns.

Donahue seemed ready to quit in the first round. Burns sent in a hard left swing which caught the Bostonian in the pit of the stomach. Donahue dropped to his knees, and claimed a foul. Referee Joy told him to get up and box or quit. Donahue accepted the former condition.

In Defence of the Bald-Headed Man

By Dorothy Dix

The bald-headed man is regarded as a pippin

With the ancient superstition that woman is incapable of taking a large, broad and philosophic view of things needed only further refutation, it would be found in the action which has recently been taken by the Eli (Neb.) Associated Women's Clubs.

In the course of their flight into the realms of pure aesthetics, this august body of intelligent ladies has grappled with the problem of the man whose poll resembles a billiard ball, and the sense of the meeting was set forth in the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That when a man becomes bald, in the opinion of the sensible members of the fair sex, he stands higher than he did when a luxurious growth of hair covered his crown. Intelligent women, especially those of the Eli Women's Club, look upon baldheaded men as being thoughtful and kind, trustworthy and compelling; past the follies and frivolities of youth; usually successful and men of property; not given to running around nights, and, moreover, the baldhead looks so clean, white and pretty that one could kiss it without a feeling of disgust."

Imagination Falters

Just listen at that, please. A Portia, I say, a whole bunch of Portias come to judgment.

Doesn't that give a solar plexus blow to the theory that only man is logical enough to rise to the height where he can give a calm and passionless verdict upon abstract merit? Can anybody imagine a man's club saying this deserved praise to the bald-headed women? Or any man ever even thinking in the depths of his secret soul, how nice and kissable was the clean white spot on the top of a woman's head?

Nay, nay, Pauline, the human imagination falters before such a stupendous task, for man is drawn by a single hair, and woe betide the luckless lady who is destitute of vibrate ornaments. Her name is Anathema, though she possessed every virtue under the sun and had not a mercified pompadour and a bunch of empire puffs and curls beside.

It is because men would have nothing to say to the hairless lady that women spend their substance for restorers waves and puffs, and switches, and braids, and transformations, and burden down their heads with a hot, headachy, pulling and uncomfortable mess, only to say most, that is expensive, unhygienic and repulsive to the women themselves. But what can you do? The poor dears are not to blame. It is all the fault of man, who cannot, like the Eli (Neb.) Women's Club, appreciate the beauty of a nice shiny pate.

Liberality of Opinion

In good truth nothing really shows how much more liberal in their opinions, how much more discerning in their judgments, how much more truly appreciative of real worth women are than men than just this thing of the different points of view of the sexes in regard to baldheads. The fact that a man's head is as free of all growth as an alkali desert does not cut the slightest ice where women are concerned. If the man is intelligent and agreeable, refined and courteous, he is eagerly sought for by society. He is overwhelmed with invitations to dinners. He may dance all night with the prettiest girl at balls, and marry whomsoever he chooses.

But fancy a woman in a similar predicament, a woman with a head like an ostrich egg. She might possess the concentrated extract of every virtue and every grace on earth, but would any hostess dare to ask a man to take her into dinner, would any man ever ask her to dance with him, would any man importune her to marry him, unless she first concealed her baldness under a wig that made her look like one of the Seven Sutherland Sisters?

Of course, there are snips of school girls who turn up their noses at baldheaded men and prefer youths with football hair. There are also certain actresses —notably Miss Olga Nethersole—who seem to derive inspiration from massaging the mucilloid locks of the leading man, as one develops electricity from rubbing a cat, but it is a comfort to know that in the opinion of the real, sane, sensible, intellectual class of womenkind—the women's club branch of the sex—the baldheaded man is regarded as a pippin, and the preferred risk in matrimony.

And how incontrovertible is their reasoning, how inescapable their conclusion! "We look upon the baldheaded man," says the Eli Women's Club, "as being thoughtful and kind." Mark that. He is "thoughtful and kind." In other words, he has passed the stage when he is chock full and sloshing over with the egotism and selfishness of youth, and has reached the place in life where he has begun to consider the rights and pleasures of others, even of a wife.

"He is trusting and confiding." Oh, very much so. Even as Samson's strength was in his hair, so is the modern man's worldly wisdom in his. With every hair that he loses he becomes an easier mark, until by the time he is bald he has gotten so that he will put his hand in that of any golden-haired kidnapper and let her lead him where she will, even to the altar.

Bald Heads Prosperous

"Baldheaded men," continue these feminine oracles, "are usually successful and men of property." Correct again. Notice the ladies in diamonds and laces at the theatre. Is there not a man with a glistening baldhead sitting by each? Observe the men who are opening big green bottles with white labels, and orderling teal duck in restaurants. Are they not almost invariably baldheaded? They are.

Whether there is some occult connection between the money-making germ and the microbe that causes a man's hair to fall out, I leave science to determine. I merely state it as a fact, and call on Mr. Rockefeller to prove that prosperity and baldness are practically synonymous, and that she is a wise woman who takes her hair in a mattress instead of on her husband's head. You never see the wife of a long-haired artist or poet riding in a limousine.

"Baldheaded men are not given to running around nights," further declared the Eli (Neb.) Women's Club. They have no ballet in Eli, Nebraska, but let that pass. You can get too much of a good thing, and a husband who never stirred from his own fireside would be liable to get upon your nerves in time. Pass we to the final characteric of the eulogy on the baldheaded man.

True and Sanitary

"The baldhead looks so clean, white and pretty that one could kiss it without a feeling of disgust."

How true and how sanitary! If you are bound to kiss any kind of a head, what infinite advantage there is in pressing a chaste salute upon one that has just been sterilized with carbolic soap and water, instead of on a hairy incubator for bacilli.

Everybody, with the exception of barbers and the manufacturers of hair restorers, will heartily endorse the admirable resolution, expressing a vote of confidence, as it were, in the baldheaded man, that was adopted by the Eli Women's Club. The baldheaded man may now move up to the same seat in life that he has always occupied at musical comedies.

MADAME X

A Great Emotional Story of Mother Love, Novelized by J. W. McConaughy by Special Arrangement With Henry W. Savage from Alexandre Bisson's Powerful Drama. Copyright, 1910, by the H. K. Fly Co

CHAPTER XVIII.
A Ghost Rises

For a time the two were silent in that close communion which is possible only to father and son, who are all in all to each other. Then the father's face lit up with a whimsical smile.

"Mind you, I don't expect that He-me will be very rich," he said. Raymond laughed.

"I don't either!" he replied.

"You have the 125,000 francs of your mother's fortune and I will add as much as I can myself."

"Oh, we will get along all right," his son assured him with a smile. "You seem to forget my briefs."

"Impossible!" laughed his father. "You haven't any."

"I have one that isn't bringing in anything in the way of money but it is giving me advertisement that will lead to profitable cases."

M. the President, being of the old school of lawyers, shook his head at this value set to publicity; but he made no comment.

"Are you ready for to-morrow?" he asked. Raymond nodded.

"I saw the presiding judge this morning and he was full of praise for you," went on his father with a fond gleam in his eyes. "They are going to make a place for me to-morrow."

"So you told me. But you'll make me terribly nervous!" protested Raymond.

"Not a bit of it! Have you really an interesting case?"

"Well, yes and no," replied the young advocate. "A wretched woman who has killed her lover for no reason that anyone can find out—and she won't speak. For the last three months she has not uttered a word in the prison that can be of any interest to anybody. We don't know who she is, where she comes from or what her name is. I haven't even seen her or heard the sound of her voice; and when the names of the judges, the public prosecutor and her defending lawyer were sent in to her she tore up the paper without looking at it."

"And couldn't the Examining Magistrate get anything out of her?"

"Nothing," he dubbed her Madame X," added Raymond with a smile.

"What sort of a woman is she?"

"Oh, like all women of her kind. She is, I understand, addicted to the use of drugs, and her supply being cut off she naturally turns from stupidity to hysteria all the time. I'm afraid it's one of the cases that are worked out before they come to trial. I don't see how the court proceedings can last much longer, than five minutes. But I'll do my best."

"Try pathos," suggested his father. "Try to work on the sympathies of the judge and jury."

"That's what I'm going to do," smiled Raymond. "I've been practising tears in my voice for the last three days, but I'm not going to have one single tear in it. It's rather hard to find excuses for a woman when you don't know why the crime was committed." And he shook his head dubiously.

"She Can't Contradict"

"On the contrary, that gives you every chance," declared his father. "See here! Your client won't speak and so she can't contradict. This gives you a fine opportunity to invent a host of reasons. Make the jury respect her silence! Throw a mantle of mystery over the whole crime and give your imagination play. Say that she is the victim of heredity—say anything you can think of that will work on the jury's feelings and you have a good chance to win."

Raymond listened with eager attention. He had something of that in mind," he said, "but I'll work it up stronger than I intended. I didn't—"

He was interrupted by a cheery shout from the house-door and both turned quickly to see M. Noel hurrying across the garden. The elder man greeted each other with hearty affection.

"And how is the young disciple of St. Yves?" asked Noel.

"St. Yves?" questioned Raymond with a puzzled smile as he shook hands.

"Why, certainly! St. Yves of Brittany! Don't you know——— How does the Latin go, Louis?"

M. the President threw up his hands and laughed.

"Let me see: 'Advocatus sed non latro—latro'—I can't remember it. Anyway, it fits your case, Maître Raymond. He was an advocate but not a thief, and devoted his life to the service of the poor. So he is supposed to be the patron saint of the lawyers—though more of them today are rather inclined to lay votive offerings on the shrine of Mammon. So to-morrow is the great day, eh?"

"Yes, to-morrow is the day."

"And you're not nervous?"

"A little excited," the young man admitted. "Have you really come all the way from Paris to be here to-morrow?"

"Of course I have!" Too tired face softened "I'd have come from Kamschatka to see you fight your first battle!"

"Chesnel is coming, too," remarked Florist.

"Good! You were not particularly interesting the day I presented the worthy doctor to young man," said Noel, turning to Raymond.

"No, so I've been told," smiled Raymond. "By Chesnel's going to take a practice at Biarritz. He often comes here to see me. Now, I think I'll go over my brief again, father, and see if I can't work in some of the things you suggested."

Search in Vain

"Yes, do it! Shake them up, my lad!" nodded his father. "After all she may be more sinned against than sinning —or you can make them think so, anyway. Well, what do you think of the boy?" he demanded, as Raymond disappeared in the direction of the large book near the gate.

"You ought to be proud of him."

"I am! Very proud!" said Florist, softly. "There was a long pause. Florist motioned his friend to a seat on the bench in the rustic house and sat beside him. He felt the need of comfort and counsel, for the hour that he had dreaded for years was upon him at last. He must tell Raymond the truth about his mother.

Twenty years of tireless searching had, indeed, proved utterly vain. There was every reason to believe that Jacqueline was dead and that the true story of the boy's mother might be buried with the three men and one woman who knew it. But this loophole of escape from the ordeal did not even present itself to a man with Florist's stern sense of honor.

How would he take it? Florist had no idea of defending himself or trying to distort the facts in the least degree. If anything, he would take more than his share of the blame for the wreck of his home. It would be terrible enough to tell Raymond that his mother had fallen, but what would he say when he was told that she had repented and pressed her pure head against her husband's shoes only to be hurled out, friendless, on the world—condemned to death, or worse than death?

Would the boy at last knowing why he had grown up without a mother's love and all the million priceless and nameless joys the phrase contains—rise in the wrath of his outraged youth and denounce the father who had robbed him? What would be say to the neglect that had driven his mother to shame and placed the brand on his own pure life? And now, whatever the cost, he must tell him.

In the twenty years they had pursued a common quest, these long silences were not unusual when the two friends met. Noel divined a little—but only a very little—of what was passing in the other's mind. He had not foreseen this crisis.

"I never look at him without thinking of his mother" he said, softly. "Louis, it's awful to think that in all these years we have been able to find a trace——"

Florist's only reply was a sombre shake of the head.

"God knows we've hunted!"

"I've done all I can—we've done all we can!" returned the husband in bitter hopelessness. "Detectives, advertising—everything! I haven't told you that I went to Monte Carlo a few days ago to see a woman that seemed to answer the description. The usual result!" And he gazed out across the garden.

Must Tell Raymond

"And last week I thought I had come to the end of the hunt," returned Noel. "The first night that I reached Paris I dropped into a music hall and thought that I recognized her on the stage. I got an introduction to the woman. She had Jacqueline's eyes to a line almost, but that was all. I was sure from the front of the house! You remember those eyes?"

"If I could only forget them," groaned the other, burying his face in his hands. There was a long silence. In the last few years growing despair and the inaction that is the inevitable outgrowth of the conviction of failure had succeeded the constantly reviving hope that had fed the energy of the search. Their talks, recently, had been bitter recriminations instead of optimistic plans. At last Florist raised his head and spoke in a low voice.

"I think sometimes that she must be dead or we should have found her!" he said. Noel, staring at the ground between his feet, did not answer at once; then:

"Perhaps!" he said in the same low tone. "And perhaps that is the best thing could have happened!"

The other understood his meaning and shuddered. There was another pause and then Florist spoke of the matter that lay heaviest on his mind.

"I have never—dared yet—to tell Raymond—the truth about his mother," he said, unsteadily; "but I have to now!"

Noel stirred at his friend in engagement.

"Tell Raymond!" he exclaimed. "Why?"

"He wants to marry and—and—I must tell him the truth!"

There was a smothered exclamation from Noel as he grasped the situation. He was silent a few moments and then he asked with meaning emphasis:

"Will you tell him the whole truth?"

Florist straightened up with a determined expression.

"Yes!" he declared, "I am going to tell him everything! He must know the whole unvarnished truth and—God knows what he'll think of me!"

Noel confusedly murmured something meant to be reassuring but Florist interrupted.

"Oh, I have no illusions!" he cried bitterly. "Youth doesn't make allowances! It is possible that he may love me a little after he has heard all of it, but he will never forgive me for having robbed him of his mother!"

Noel pulled himself together and replied with a heartiness that he did not feel.

"Why, of course, he will!" he declared. "He knows what kind of a man you are—what a father you have been to him—and he will not need to be told how you have suffered and repented."

The other shook his head hopelessly.

"The boy is in love!" he groaned. "If it were not for that there might be some hope. But, don't you see? He is madly in love with a pure, beautiful girl. He will try to put himself in my place and fail. He will try to imagine himself throwing Helene out into the street in the rain after she has grovelled at his feet—and he will think I am a monster!"

Noel could think of a counter-argument. Rose hurried out from the house with a visiting card in her hand. Composing himself, Florist looked up and asked:

"What is it, Rose?"

She handed him the card with:

"It's the two gentlemen who were here before and wanted to see you, M. the President."

"Perisard! Perisard!" mused the President, studying the bit of pasteboard. "I don't know the name. However, Rose, show them in and take M. Noel up to his room."

The friends silently gripped hands as a mute promise that they would renew the conversation later and Noel went in with the housekeeper.

CHAPTER XIX.
Hope at Last

Messrs. Perisard and Merivel were not hopelessly shocked and grief-stricken over the death of Laroque. They were grateful to his memory, inasmuch as he had put them in the way of making 125,000 francs with more ease and less risk than they had expected to hear in collecting, at the outside, three-fifths of that amount in Bordeaux. They were doubly grateful when they reflected that his timely death had saved them 10 per cent. of that amount.

While he would have been useful in the matter of the public official of Bordeaux, they felt that they would eventually find as trustworthy an agent. On the whole, from the viewpoint of the partners in Confidential Missions, nothing in his life became him as the leaving it. The fact that he had been murdered by the wife of the President of the Court of Toulouse put the gentleman in position where he could not possibly refuse to pay for "discretion."

They went over all this as they sat in a cafe not far from the Florist house in Bordeaux and waited for M. Florist's return. It had taken them nearly three months to finally fix upon him as the husband of the homicide of the Three Crowns. They went to Toulouse to interview him and found that he had just gone to Bordeaux to attend the trial in which his son was to appear for the defense. They fairly hugged themselves with pious joy when they saw the shocking corruption of the whole proceedings.

"We have got him, my dear Merival," declared M. Perisard. "And he has actually come to Bordeaux to see the trial!"

"A most shrewd man!" rumbled his colleague.

"I should say so!" returned M. Perisard. "He has his own son chosen for the defense, and according to gossip, his son is to marry the daughter of the Public Prosecutor!"

"A most clever man!" insisted M. Merivel in a voice like the roar of the surf.

"And they tell me that Florist's wife refused to say a word to the Examining Magistrate."

"Of course! The husband has been telling her what to do!"

"Obviously! Obviously!" agreed the senior partner with a vigorous nod. "In this way, you see, her names won't even be mentioned, and as nobody knows her in Bordeaux——" A two-handed gesture and a shrug of the shoulders filled the status.

"None of the trouble will get out of the family," decided M. Merivel heavily.

"The jury will find her guilty or acquit her—that is of no interest whatever. But no one will ever know the inner interest!"

"Excepting ourselves, my dear Perisard," corrected the ex-schoolmaster.

"Exactly! Exactly! It is most providential!"

It was with the situation thus reasoned out that the defenders of society presented themselves for the second time at the house of M. Florist, when they were conducted to the garden. M. the President received them with grave courtesy and invited them to take seats. With all three comfortably settled, M. Merivel being a little in the background, he asked:

"What can I do for you, gentlemen?"

"Have I the honor of speaking to President Florist?" inquired M. Perisard in his most polished manner.

"Yes, monsieur. And your name is—?"

"Perisard! This is M. Merivel, my associate," he added, rising with a bow to that gentleman who also rose and saluted M. the President with a profound obeisance.

"And what business brings you to Bordeaux?" M. Florist inquired once more when they had all resumed their seats.

"A—a matter of some delicacy, M. the President," began the senior partner, clearing his throat impressively. "A matter which interests you personally."

CAUGHT!
I'LL PLACE YOU SAFELY ON THIS BOAT OR FIGHT ALL OUR BATTLES
NOW DESMOND I'LL SAIL ALONE
CURSES! I'M LOST. I'LL GET THROUGH THE TUNNEL CURSES!

Here's where Claude and Rosamond have an elegant chance to shake Desperate Desmond. The villain is trying to persuade them to follow along behind the train, and threatens to shoot if they don't, but he couldn't do any accurate shooting from the top of a train going at the rate of fifty miles an hour!

Well, what do you think of that? Claude Eclaire, the big hook, falls for Desmond's bluff, and the first we get is the sight of our hero when he doesn't use any more judgment than that. Honest, dear reader, there's times we are so sore on that chump that we rather enjoy seeing Desmond put one over on him.

Somebody ought to make a kick to the General Manager of this railroad. Here are four cars missing and left in the middle of a long trestle and nobody seems to have noticed it but Desperate Desmond, who is using his business to keep posted on everything that affords opportunities for dirty work.

If that horse were not a whole lot wiser than his driver, Claude and Rosamond would at this moment be taking a flying dive through the trestle. But the nag has been associating with Desmond so long and has learned a trick or two. It's starting and will have to wait on the villain when the train pulls in. But then it costs money to telegraph.

At last, Claude is going to start something. It's about time, too. Still we can't blame him if it's necessary for him to go after the villain personally. It would be much easier to step at the nearest telegraph station and wire ahead for the police to nab the villain when the train pulls in. But then it costs money to telegraph.

And perhaps Claude prefers to take the law into his own hands. You get quicker action that way. But as it may, Claude and Desmond are both on top of the train, and if they get to fighting somebody is likely to fall over and get mixed up. Of course you want to see the next pictures. They'll be out Monday.

Going to the Country

By WINIFRED BLACK

HE'S twenty-two and she's twenty, and he's "in trouble" and he's going to get out soon—and then what!

He loves her and he's sorry and ashamed for doing wrong and getting into "trouble," and he says he'll do anything in the world to show her that he is worth forgiving.

She wants to go somewhere in the country away from the bright lights and the old "friends," and he says he'll go to Greenland if she'll only tell him how they are to make a living when they get there.

"Can't we go somewhere outside of the big, cruel, sneering town," says the little girl, "where are young and strong and willing to work hard and we love each other so."

Can't you go somewhere outside of the big town, little woman?

Why, of course you can, and of course you will, too, if you keep your good womanly common sense. Get away from Boston and get away as soon as you can, but away from the old "record," and away from the pitying friends and the sneering acquaintances. Get out into the country and be free.

Find some little thrifty, friendly town, not so far away that you'll have to spend a king's ransom getting there, find a little house and put a stick or two of furniture in it—you say you have a little money saved—and look for work.

All kinds of work at all kinds of prices—and you'll find it. I was never in a village in my life that I didn't hear every other person in it complaining that there was no one there to do "odd jobs." People in little villages want trunks wheeled to the station, and they want the pump mended, and they want a new shelf in the pantry, and they want someone to come in and help when there's company, and they need a good, sensible, reliable woman to look after the children for a day or so at a time when mother is ill or has to go away a little while. Oh, the little village is full of honest work for honest folks, and full of friendly companionship, too.

You will be invited to the church social and to the sewing bee at the minister's house, and you will get a card to the church library, and they'll be asking you to help in the Sunday school, and first thing that you realize you'll know every one in town and by June you'll be going up to the schoolhouse with the rest of the neighbors to help decorate the big room for the last day's exercises.

Lonesome? There's no lonesomeness so awful as the loneliness of a big city.

Dull—why, your life will be twice as full of friends and of interest out there in the snowy little village as it is right now in the big, noisy, indifferent town.

Go and see the postmaster of the village, and the minister and the livery stable keeper and the storekeeper. Tell them you're both in town and both looking for business. Not hard up, not looking for charity, but well and good-humored and anxious to show what you can do.

Try it, little woman; try it, discouraged man—in six months' time you'll wonder what on earth you were thinking of not to try it before.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

LOVE AND ABSENCE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

To settle a dispute, will you kindly give your valued opinion of the following two questions:

Can it be possible for a young man, who has neither seen nor written to a girl in ten months, to have her at the end of that time? Also, does absence make the heart grow fonder?

ANXIOUS TWO.

IN some cases absence makes the heart grow fonder, in others it does not; it depends on the constancy of the persons concerned. If the man truly loved the girl, I think his love would stand the test of ten months' absence and silence.

LEAVE THINGS AS THEY ARE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

About a year and a half ago I met a young man with whom I fell deeply in love. But whenever he mentioned the subject to me, I always laughed and told him I was too young to know my own mind, I being then only seventeen years old.

At present he is in his home town and we correspond once in a while. He wrote to a friend of mine and said I did not think anything about him.

Now, please, Miss Fairfax, how am I to let him know? I am rather bashful in confessing it.

R. ii.

YOU had better leave things as they are.

The fact that you correspond with him will give him sufficient encouragement. If he really cares for you, he comes to see you, let him know that you are glad to see him.

BETTER WAIT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man, twenty-one years and six months old, and in love with a very charming girl of twenty-two. Our folks have positively forbidden us going together, as her folks have money, and I have not. We tried to break away from each other, but cannot do so any longer, so we have decided to marry. Do you think $15 a week enough to live on? Fair prospects ahead.

A R.

YOU would be much wiser to wait until you have a little more money and her parents' consent. You are both young and your salary is small; much better wait. You should not take a girl away from a comfortable home unless you can take good care of her.

AN IMPERTINENT YOUNG MAN

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young girl of eighteen, considered quite good looking and popular. Every morning on my way to the city I meet a handsome young fellow on the train. Several times he has said "Good morning," or winked at me, but I have never been able to return his greeting, because my mother was always with me. How can I get rid of my uncle?

EXITED.

THE young man is most impertinent, and if you had any pride you would look on his actions as an insult. Don't be a foolish girl, pay no attention to the young man and if he attempts to speak to you ignore him severely.

Fashion Gleanings

Long coats of watered moire silk are made in Paris right fitting, enveloping the wearer from head to foot.

Heavy thread and metal laces are pretty features of the Winter hats designed to wear with dressy clothes.

For evening wear gold or silver tulle turbans are seen with tall algrettes or groups of marabout feathers.

Ecrusse levant is the name given to that fine grain leather of high finish that is so popular for purses and bags.

There is nothing prettier or smarter than white fur for collars of evening wraps, especially for young women.

Chains are no longer in evidence for the black velvet bags; all have long silk cords by which to swing them from the arm.

Huge muller or round collars of fur or fancy fabrics mark the 1911 evening coat, and bands of fur are at the foot of many.

Fine threads, fine dots, the meshes and a general delicacy of structure and design are predominating features of the new veils.

The most effective afternoon dresses are those of black mousseline over silk or satin in oriental design, most of them having a deep hem of velvet. There are no touches of white on these dresses. The guimpes are of black lace or tucked chiffon.

New slippers from Paris are of satin, richly embroidered with gold and silver bullion—gold upon white satin and silver upon black satin.

Marabou feathers are much used, and, as the latest novelty, cocks' feathers dyed to match the primary colors of the gown have arrived.

Postal Savings

Amos R. Wells, editor of the Christian Endeavor World, contributes this little poem on postal savings.

WELL, wife, they've given us at last
The postal savings banks;
And we, too, the poor and the small folk
Will give them many thanks
For we were foolish, like as not
And stupid as a clam;
We would not trust the other banks
But well trust Uncle Sam.

Our precious thousand dollars, wife
Down underneath the floor
It isn't much for big concerns,
But is all our store.
The bulls and bears disquiet me.
But mighty glad I am
To trust the huge hot stocking of
Our steady Uncle Sam.

One own good bank is made of tin
Beneath the carpet there.
What burglar would suspect the wealth
Under that rocking chair?
But I will rip the flooring up,
And, trusting as a lamb,
I'll take those thousand dollars to
Our honest Uncle Sam.

For Uncle Sam, we may be sure,
Will never run away!
But he, and what we give to him,
Are ready here to pay.
No, panics, bulls, or bears for him.
No high finance Sin-Sam,
We'll trust those little savings banks
Of trusty Uncle Sam.

Synopsis of Previous Instalments

The story opens at a fashionable wedding in New York. Among the guests are Cyrus Emerson, a young banker. He and the bride, Catherine Darwin, have been friends from childhood, but it is not until he has married to another that Wilbur realizes that he loves her. Fearing that some of the other guests will notice his mental distress and guess the reason for it, he hastily leaves the church and goes for a long walk in the park where he can be alone with his thoughts. He decides to try to forget his love for Catherine by plunging with renewed energy into business.

Wilbur's father, John Emerson, is a conservative banker. Wilbur is anxious to organize a banking syndicate modern lines, and after much persuasion, obtains his father's consent.

Together with several other financiers, he organizes a chain of banks. The so-called Money Trust, fearing the new concern is becoming too powerful, causes a panic which threatens to wreck the new enterprise.

Emerson knows that by a technical violation of the banking laws he can obtain enough gold to enable his banks to weather the storm. His partners are afraid to take this step, but Wilbur shows them that there is no other alternative but ruin, and they finally consent.

James Darwin is appointed a special prosecutor to investigate the Emerson Banking Company. He calls for Arthur Cowper, one of Emerson's partners, and frightens him into making a confession.

Darwin learns that his wife is a guest at a ball given by the Emersons, and goes to the house to demand that she come home with him at once.

CHAPTER VII.

Making a Stand

ISABEL EMERSON had almost been in tears when Catherine told her that her husband had come and had sent her a message to get her wraps and come home with him.

"You must go?"

"Not exactly." Catherine had calmly replied. "I must go as far as the smoking room and see him, but I have no intention of going home until I have danced my last dance, my dear. I am heartily sick of this nonsense, and here is where I make a stand." And she smiled out.

She knew at the time that she married Darwin that she did not truly love him. She was hurt by Wilbur Emerson's treatment and felt sure that she could be reasonably happy with the older man. She had the most profound respect for his high character, the deepest admiration for his courage and steadfast righteousness in the battle against corruption.

At least this was the way she felt on her wedding day. But a woman seldom knows a man until she has "Wintered and Summered" him.

In the four years of their married life Catherine Darwin had come to know her husband a great deal better than he knew himself—and he did not gain credit as she gained knowledge.

She saw that his "high character" was a well-acted pose that had so far deceived the gullible world—a world sick of fraud, immorality and corruption in high places.

She knew that his crusade for "honesty" carried on by the petty trickery and chicanery of a thoroughly selfish and self-seeking man. And her contempt for him was greater than her respect had ever been.

Duty's Slave

But the young woman had all of the nobility that her husband lacked. She had sworn to be his true and faithful wife, and she would do it if it killed her. She had accepted with a whimper much that was unpleasant in order to avoid an open breach, because she knew that a public separation would be a terrible blow to his political prospects. Not for herself, but she recognized it as her duty to the man she had married to do nothing that might interfere with the career he had chosen.

On the subject of her devotion to her friends, the Emersons, she had also deliberately and openly defied him. On this point she was adamant, and so had, so far, wisely refrained from opposing her after the angry reply the first time he told her that he wished she would not be so much at their house.

"I would not think of objecting to any of your friends if they were respectable, but I expect the same liberty myself." But had told him, in a manner that implied that she meant to have it, too. So even though he had asked her not to go, she was somewhat surprised that he dared to come to her and insist that she return just as the ball was getting into full swing. And when she entered the room she was in much the same frame of mind as a certain famous politician on the eve of the Saratoga convention—if he wanted a fight he could have it.

"James," she said, her voice as cold and sweet as ice cream, "old Mr. Emerson was so upset that he said good-by to me just now—and I hadn't the slightest intention of leaving. What have you said to him?"

"Catherine," he replied brusquely, ostentatiously closing the collar of his overcoat. "I want you to come home at once!"

She lifted her eyebrows a trifle and gazed at him in mild surprise.

Ordered Home

"Oh, surely you're not serious!" she exclaimed, with just a maddening touch of raillery in the tone. "Why, I've only just arrived—and I'm enjoying myself thoroughly. I can't go for at least an hour. So, if you don't mind waiting." She paused and looked at him as if she fully expected that he would say: "Not at all, my dear."

"I do mind!" he blurted out angrily.

"But surely you don't expect me to break up this charming party—just because you've arrived and are glancing over her dance card.

"I expect you not to come here to-night. You willfully disregarded my—my—"

"Your—orders," she supplemented, sweetly.

"My request—and now you must take the consequences," he angrily retorted.

"Indeed! You see, you gave no reason—no explanation—and it naturally did not occur to me that you could possibly be in earnest."

"The fact that it was my wish should be sufficient reason!" he declared, drawing himself up in angry pomposity.

"Oh, nonsense, James!"

"Catherine!"

"Now, do drop that tragic expression!" she begged, with a trifling whimper—"why not stay yourself? There are a lot of pretty girls here who'd be simply charmed to dance with the famous prosecuting attorney! No? I'll dance ten numbers with you myself, and, God knows," she added with a fervor that did not help his temper, "that's penance enough for having dared to disobey my lord and master's injunction! Is that the right legal term? Oh, come, James! Soften a little! Come out of your shell!"

"You don't take me seriously, eh?" he said, in a low voice that trembled with suppressed anger. "That's your latest pose—you refuse to take anything seriously!"

Tragedy or Comedy

"I dare not," she answered, gravely "Whether life is a tragedy or a comedy to me depends on the way I look at it. I defy. prefer comedy—that's why I chose to come here and revel in wifely disobedience, rather than sit at home, contemplating my virtuous, submissive self in lonely silence."

"Do you wish me to understand that you refuse to come home?"

"I? The boy and girl, James?" And she looked up into his flushed face, half pleading, half mocking.

"It's impossible!"

"See! I'll cancel all these engagements—every one of them—and dance through the whole list with you, if you sing! Could say wife do more? Furthermore, I'll wear one gown and other for the rest of the week—as extra pounce. No? Adamant, eh? Stern, strong, unbending, unyielding—fine qualities for a statue, James, but not for a husband."

Darwin pressed his lips together and controlled his anger by a strong effort. He had come to her house—he must make her "change her tune"—and he resolved to use it.

"Catherine," he said, quietly and coldly, "in the light of recent events, you must not be seen here among these people. It's not expedient."

"There are more than a hundred people here," she returned lightly. "Which one do you object to?"

"All of them in general; your host, Wilbur Emerson, in particular."

"He is not my host."

"This is his house, retorted her husband. "The Emersons—the Cowpers—and all the others associated in business with him are here. I know the whole list—it reads like a bankers' convention. And I wish you to leave at once."

Suspected Criminals

She looked at him curiously, her resolution unchanged, but slightly shaken. There must be something more than mere foolish jealousy here.

"It will seem so strange"—she murmured.

Her husband made a gesture of grim resignation.

"Catherine," he said, slowly, giving each word heavy emphasis, "you force me to tell you the real state of affairs. Emerson's chain of banks is in serious condition. The Federal expert examiners have just taken possession, and in all probability, at the hand of the Federal Government, will fail finally. It means disgrace, surely—most likely imprisonment for them. In my position as special appointee of the United States Attorney-General, I cannot allow my wife to remain on terms of social intimacy with—suspected criminals!"

Catherine gripped the edge of the table hard. The room was whirling around her. "James!" she tried to cry, but the voice was only a frightened whisper.

"Oh, I hardly expected you to sympathize with my attitude," he went on bitterly. "We seldom agree on anything. But I am making the investigation, and I am in a position to know who they are. However," he glanced at his watch, "that is for the police. I've just time to leave you at the house."

"Then you—are not—coming home—with me?" she asked mechanically. Her mind was still numb from the shock.

"No," was the short answer. "I must go to Washington at midnight, in the morning I've an important conference to-night and one with the Attorney General early to-day. He's determined to enforce the law and has retained me to help him. Some people are to be rounded up—exterminated—made an example of! Of course, I need not tell you it means great political advancement for me if I succeed in convincing them—perhaps the Attorney-Generalship."

Ruthless Ambition

He thought from her silence that he was at last convincing her. Convincing! At last she could think clearly as she caught at the phrase "political advancement." He could talk of political advancement at the sacrifice of her friends.

He wanted to "root out" laughing, gorgeous, open-handed Isabel!

In glorified in the "extermination" of that sweet old man who had been a father to her—who had taken the place of the father she could not remember—who had been this very man's benefactor!

She looked forward joyously to "making an example of" Wilbur Emerson!

He thought eagerly of mounting to the Cabinet on the ruins of his friends' fortunes and anguish and despair of these—her friends!

She looked at him as she might have looked at some loathsome, crawling thing that had crept into the Emerson house to kill them as they slept.

"Oh God!" she groaned. "Must you—always lie—even to yourself, of others? Before he could open his mouth to reply she rushed to stop him at once cause ever her with a rush.

"James, these people are my friends!" she cried, in a strained, agonized voice. "Your friends! They have helped us—loved us!"

"I have no friends," he replied, with the air of a Brutus. "Besides, whatever old Emerson did for me years ago has been more than counterbalanced by his wife."

"How?" came in a whisper from Catherine's dry lips. He eyed her coldly.

"Let me see your engagement card!" She handed it to him. He gave it a quick glance and then with a rigid forefinger stabbed it viciously in a dozen places.

The Answer

"There! 'W. E.,' 'W. E.,' 'W. E.!'" he snarled. "Wilbur Emerson! I think that's the answer, Catherine!"

"Mr. Emerson is not here to-night," she answered, dully. "These are unfulfilled promises. He is not sufficiently interested in me to keep his engagements."

"He is sufficiently interested to make them," he retorted.

"No, not even that," she replied in the same tone. "That's his sister Isabel's hand—he isn't even here!"

"These people are malefactors—criminals—a menace to society! That's all, Catherine."

"I don't believe it!" she blazed out suddenly.

"You don't want to believe it, Catherine," he went on with calm superiority. He was beginning to take savage pleasure in the pain he was inflicting. "Well, I intend to show you I'm right and"—

"Of course, you're right!" she broke in with a hot whirl of words. "Even if you're not you have the horrible faculty of being able to prove that I am wrong! That's the penalty I pay for being the wife of a clever lawyer. But, James!" she cried, with sudden change, at the horror of her friends' position came back to her more strongly, "can't you let some one else undertake this investigation?"

"No!"

"For my sake!" she pleaded, with a break in her voice, moving toward him with clasped hands outstretched. "Do this one thing for my sake! James, for——"

"What!" he cried, starting back angrily. "Give up an opportunity like this! The chance of a lifetime! Ah! This shows how little you care whether I succeed or fail! You ought to be glad that my chance has come at last! But you don't care!" he added bitterly. "You never cared!"

Recriminations

"Yes—James!" she stopped abruptly and hastily turned her back to the door as Isabel hustled in.

"Kitty! Kitty! This won't do!" she cried. "We can't let you go like this! Oh, let her stay, Mr. Darwin! Don't be such a bear!"

"I must go," Geoffry Estle said Catherine. Darwin could only see that the girl in her bride's robe had

MANY SALES AT TRUCK EXHIBIT

By J. C. KERBISON.

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—This, the last day of the motor truck show in Madison Square Garden, finds the interest in motor trucks fully sustained. There is nothing which would in the slightest way indicate a falling off in general interest and the sales are certainly more numerous than they were earlier in the week.

Harry Stratton of Boston, who handles the Kissel Kar, is here in New York also. Yesterday he sold a 5½ ton Kissel Kar truck to the American Woolen Company, President Woods, and this company also purchased a five-ton truck from the H. B. Morgan Company. The Kissel Kar is very similar to that which won the five-ton event in the Boston Athletic Association run.

Mr. Kenney, of the Manhattan Truck Company, had the distinguished honor, yesterday afternoon, of receiving a check for ten five-ton trucks from the Walker Prest Company. These trucks are of the same type as the one which established such purchase there.

The show as a whole, has proven great educational feature and indicates in the plainest manner the great strides that are to be anticipated in the motor truck world in the next few months. It is confidently expected that within a year at least, motor trucks will be twice as common on the business streets of the city as they are to-day.

Show Ends Tonight.

"Utility" was the key-note of the exhibit, and the trim delivery wagons and the powerful trucks invited the closest of the attention of the public. There was nothing in the exhibit which was not of utilitarian purpose, and when the show closes this evening, the visitors to the show will feel fully satisfied with the results of their day's exhibiting in Madison Square Garden.

The trucks, which occupied a prominent position on the ground floor, were always attractive. They great work in the past and the work that is being done by the non-stop car demonstrating these vehicles will be of the greatest benefit to the motor-type. Also truck had up to ten hours, giving the trucks the world's record for long stop performances in any one of this type. Manufacturers, dealers and operators alike, are watching this performance very carefully, and engineers from many companies are keeping close track of the performance, consumption of gasoline, mileage per gallon, and all that sort of thing.

In the Motor boats there is a striking contrast in trucks. Among them is the new Hewitt, the largest car in the show, one finds the little one-ton truck, both of which are handled in Boston by the J. W. Sherman Company.

The latest of the Hewitt models is the one-ton truck. It is equipped with a stock cast motor, 3½ by 4¾ inches. A constant level splash system of lubrication is used, and a Bosch magneto furnishes the ignition. Semi-elliptic springs on the wheels furnishes the final drive. Three speeds forward and reverse are furnished. There is a double chain drive.

The car has a loading space 7½ feet long and 44½ feet wide, and will carry a fifteen-foot load. The front tires are 36x3½ inches, the rear 36x4. The maximum speed of twenty-five miles an hour and the chassis, fitted with seat, costs $1,500.

The car is designed to meet the needs of department stores and dealers. It is the baby of the Hewitt family, which displays a ten-tonner for a milk concern, the biggest thing in the show.

Kissel Car Display.

The Kissel Car display in another one that is most attractive, and being situated on a point of vantage, it is impossible to escape overlooked. Mr. Harry Stratton of Boston, points with pride to the fact that on the Kissel Kar, which forms a riding seat, the cushions are not simply strips hanging down by such spring and so mounted as to allow the load transmitted to the body and springs are brought down to the minimum. While, of course, not entirely accurate, it is simply so for the average driver and serves to prevent rough riding and abuse with consequent damages and trouble. The Kissel Kar spring backing is fitted with grease cups to lubricate them.

One of the lightest cars in the show is the Reo light truck, handled in Boston by the Lincoln Motor Company. This is a sturdy little car, economical in its use, and is designed to meet the requirements of a light delivery wagon. The essential thing in the Reo wagon is its reliability, as well as economy.

TO-DAY'S STOCK PRICES ARE IRREGULAR

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—With but few exceptions prices of most of the stocks here fractionally under the closing of yesterday, losses being about equally divided throughout the list. A heavy tone prevailed throughout fair trading on the London market.

A few of the railroad stocks, including Northern Pacific, Reading, Canadian Pacific and St. Paul, opened fractionally higher, but all of these stocks continued to decline as all.

American Smelting was exceedingly strong, moving up from 78⅝ to 79 during the first hour. Amalgamated was also strong, moving to within a fraction of 65, but soon broke back to the point of the first half-hour. Consolidated Gas ruled strong and active and fractionally higher. Strength in this stock was reflected in stocks as declared by the directors of International Harvester to-day.

STATE ST. NEWS FOR INVESTORS

One of the good signs of the times is that the customers' rooms of the brokerage houses in the street are filling up, and that the professional traders are becoming fearish again. They do not like to see stocks go up.

$ $ $

Note that the public interest is becoming more pronounced it would be idle to expect any great boom in stock activities. All the selling started originates with the traders on the floor of the Stock Exchange, and is not supported at all.

$ $ $

When the railroads begin to order supplies it will mean a boom in the iron and steel trade, and as it is known that the railroads throughout the country are well-nigh bare of manufactured goods there is plenty of room for upsets in the woolen and cotton goods industries.

$ $ $

All the copper stocks are being picked up. It is understood, with the idea of starting a campaign in them. They have been quiet so long that an operative gathering alone some public interest might be excited in the group.

$ $ $

There is nothing whatever in the action of the market to suggest the ending of cent stock, and the course of prices has been such as to encourage the belief on the part of those who have securities and those who want to come in and buy. The speculative side is decidedly more attractive than the other.

$ $ $

Sentiment continues as optimistic as ever, the feeling of safety being helped along by the knowledge that the big element is supporting prices. The financial outlook will be found on a sufficiently safe basis, it is believed, until the larger loans to be made by the corporations are out of the way.

$ $ $

The Tennessee Copper Company has signed a contract with the International Agricultural Corporation whereby the latter agrees to take the Tennessee Company's entire sulphuric acid output for the next ten years. Acid output, when the Tennessee's new plant is in full operation, will be 225,000 tons per annum, it is estimated.

$ $ $

Reports from the board refer to a great deal of manipulation at Reading. It is said there exists a distribution of any consequence because there is no outside absorption. The stock is looked for in some quarters as being churned as it is to encourage short selling, the bulls being confident they will be able to make something of an improvement, like a point or two or to be rather against them. The Interborough-Metropolitan 4½ and 5 per cent bonds for 4 per cent. bonds will be a saving of $204,000 or nearly 1 per cent. on common stock.

$ $ $

In the matter of equipment and rails, the American railroads are in a peculiar position. In the last two years they have not bought anything like what they should have purchased. They have been economizing, using their old rolling stock and rails, just as a man will wear his old clothes for the sake of economy. But like the man who can no longer wear even his old clothes, but who, by resorting to buying worn them, is able to buy new ones, the railroads will soon begin to buy rails and new rolling stock and some fine new rails.

$ $ $

On June 30 last the Southern Pacific reported advances for the construction and acquisition of new lines and for the aid of subsidiary companies aggregating nearly $87,000,000, besides which it owned the Southern Pacific nearly $100,000,000 and the Southern Pacific Railroad the operating company more than $40,000,000. There is room there for a considerable capital operation to reimburse the Southern Pacific Company for money spent.

$ $ $

Among railroads New Haven attracts much attention. The stock is now selling under 150 for weeks, which is too low for New Haven. Dividends on the line shares are such as to suggest the beginning of an important movement.

BOSTON 'COUNT' TO BE DEPORTED

The society career of Felix de la Chaux, an escaped inmate of a lunatic asylum at Long Point, Canada, who posed as the Boston correspondent of the Figaro of Paris and the reality of a fashionable life in a boarding house in the Back Bay section, has come to an end. He is in danger of deportation after having been fairly lionized by Boston art devotees and city and federal officials.

BAY STATE HAS COTTON RECORD

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—In the consumption of cotton in the United States, according to the forthcoming census bulletin on the supply and distribution of cotton for the year ending August 31, 1910, Massachusetts ranks first, North Carolina second, South Carolina third, Alabama sixth and Rhode Island seventh. Massachusetts exceeds every other State in the number of cotton spindles, having 8,535,616, or 34 per cent. of the total for the country.

BIG CONGRESS OF CATHOLICS

More than 1,500 delegates have been selected to represent their respective organizations at the archdiocesan congress of the Catholic Federation in Symphony Hall on Sunday, January 29, the first to be held in Boston. The sessions will be open to the public and the program arranged will be interesting, as the speakers include some of the most distinguished members of the clergy and laity.

GIRL MADE DUMB BY UNCLE'S SHOT

Doctors fear the Septimnia Vienna, the fourteen-year-old girl who was shot by her love-crazed uncle, Candido Vienna, in her home in Percival place, East Boston, will never recover her speech.

The girl has regained her senses after being unconscious a week. With the exception that her tongue is paralyzed, probably permanently, she is showing signs of improvement, and the chances are better than ever that she will recover.

AMATEUR NIGHT POPULAR AS EVER

Amateur night at the Columbia Theatre holds its popularity, and in spite of the fact that these entertainments have been running every week for six years the crowd at last night's "hook" show was as large and enthusiastic as ever. Some of the beginners this week showed talent of a high order, which served to make those who didn't more enjoyable by comparison. The Three McDonalds, John, Jim and Mary, carried off first prize with their very clever acrobatic feats, and Pauline Barry, a sweet-voiced little South Boston girl, got second money.

Here Are Some Very Difficult Questions

If Anybody Can Answer, Let Him Answer Promptly, by All Means

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal-Examiner

A friend who lives in Cambridge is tormented by much abstract speculation. He sends to the editor questions that are numerous and puzzling—here is the very latest letter:

Editor AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—Couples marry and after a few months or weeks get a divorce. Was it TRUE love at all, or was it physical attraction or passion?

Can true love ever die?

Don't most marriages come through PROPINQUITY?

What IS true love (IN PROSE)?

Please discuss the above and oblige. Yours sincerely,

A. G. HOWE.

This newspaper knows a good deal about the Panama Canal, a little about the tariff and something about "Shakespeare and the musical glasses."

But we cannot answer one of these questions.

Somebody, however, can answer them undoubtedly, and that somebody is requested to answer at once and at full length.

We have certain experts who make it their business to answer questions like these. Beatrice Fairfax answers such questions in prose. Ella Wheeler Wilcox answers them in poetry. Nell Brinkley answers them in pictures.

We shall ask all three of these geniuses if they can answer Mr. Howe's important questions. And we invite all of our readers to help in answering them.

As Mr. Howe's letter indicates that he is in a hurry for information, we are bound to do our feeble best and at least TRY to give some kind of a reply to his questions—while waiting to hear from our experts.

Mr. Howe asks, "Was it TRUE love at all" in cases where couples who marry and separate after a few months or weeks?

Usually, probably, "it was" plain, everyday thoughtless foolishness.

And even women take a husband—any husband—because they feel that they must have one of some kind or other.

You must remember, too, that while marriage is the perfect state, it is a great deal too good for many human beings.

The talk about doing away with marriage, establishing trial marriages, etc., is offensive nonsense. Marriage ultimately will be universal. And through marriage itself man will gradually be educated to a state of decency and kindness in which he will make marriage a success.

"Don't most marriages come through propinquity?" Yes, Mr. Howe, they probably do. Propinquity means being near to a person. You marry the kind of a person that you like, and it is only by being near to that person that the individual can discover human likes. But it is not all propinquity. If you mean to ask whether men and women marry simply BECAUSE THEY ARE THROWN TOGETHER, the answer is, NO.

Nature is always struggling wisely to make men and women marry their opposites. Mother Nature intends to keep her children about alike. So she makes the fat woman marry the thin man, the tall man marry the short woman. And she brings different minds together in marriage just as she brings different bodies, in order that by mixing up the different kinds of human beings we may all remain the average type and not divide into monstrously different sizes and sorts like the dogs at a bench show.

Mr. Howe asks, "What is true love (in prose)?"

We shall have to let Beatrice Fairfax answer that question. It is too difficult for an ordinary person. Truth, however, can be defined, and that may help Mr. Howe a little. That which is true is honest, unselfish, loyal, anxious to fulfill promises, patient and forbearing.

If Mr. Howe is that kind of a young or old man we advise him to go and get married. He probably has "true love" in his disposition—although we do not guarantee it.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

FATE OF BOER PRISONERS

Editor AMERICAN:

I was surprised and shocked on reading about the Boer prisoners in Bermuda. It seems to me that although the war has been over for nearly eight years, the prisoners, or rather a large portion of Prinsloo's Commando, seem to be the most unfortunate ones for the mere reason that they were in no hurry to take the oath of allegiance to the King of England.

I for one am not at all surprised that many of the Boer prisoners or other Boers could not easily make up their minds to take this oath, for I am one of those that took up arms to fight with the Boers against England, and I know that it is not at all easy to renounce your own country, and become a subject of some other, because might is right.

I believe that the word "freedom" is at times very much misunderstood, and our American readers will see the difference how countries which are governed by kings and many other nobles, differ from republics, such as ours is. Respectfully yours,

SAMUEL I. JUDELSOHN.

LOOK FOR KING SIRIUS

Editor AMERICAN:

Our own sun shines upon us by day, and Sirius sparkles upon us by night. King Sirius is, from our standpoint, the brightest of the fornian suns, and may in called our Sol of night. Sparkling and scintillating amid the southeast, south and southwest lower section of the firmament, Sirius is a true sidereal monarch; a raging sky furnace, sending his rays across a vast gulf approximating 50,000,000,000,000 miles. Upon a clear and cold January evening it is well worth one's while and effort to leave a comfortable fireside to watch Sirius in the scintillating splendor of his diamond-like fire.

ASTRONOMER.

POLICEMEN AT NIGHT

Editor AMERICAN:

I would like to say a word in regard to inefficient police protection in the city of Boston. It seems to me that for a city of this size, one meets very few policemen on the street at night, and especially after 11 o'clock. It's getting so that its really dangerous to venture out at night. I recently walked from Park square to Tremont, up Tremont to Park, up Park to State House, through State House to Hancock, down Hancock to Myrtle at 12:30 a. m., and saw only one policeman. He was trying securely-locked doors at Tremont and Boylston streets.

Where is the protection the taxpayers are paying for? Who is responsible for these conditions?

A CITIZEN.

When the Guard Says 'Umph!

He means Friend street, according to Wex Jones' Guide to City Dwellers in the Big City Life Section of the Sunday AMERICAN. The "Guide" is funny and it will help you to find your way around—perhaps.

BOOKLAND

EDITED BY EDWIN MARKHAM

EDWIN MARKHAM

Roswell Field and John Vance Cheney, Associate Editors

AMANDA JONES, of the Midwest, author of "Atlantis," "A Prairie Idyl," "The Rubaiyat of Solomon," was esteemed a poet as far back as the time of John G. Whittier and J. G. Holland. Later critics, like Richard Henry Stoddard, Austen Dobson, Edmund C. Steadman and Richard Watson Gilder, have spoken well of her work—of its vigor and freshness, its inspiration, its lyric sweep.

Miss Jones has just published another book. This time she comes, not as a poet, but as the author of a curious volume dealing with matters outside the present revelations of science. She calls her book "A Psychic Autobiography." She was encouraged by the late Professor William James to write it, and Professor James Hyslop introduces it.

All of this goes to show the intelligence and honor of the author, now a woman past seventy, yet as well poised and active as many a woman of fifty. Miss Jones of blended Scotch, Irish, Dutch and Welsh blood—types of Puritan ancestors; and, as all her writing shows, she is of an ardent religious temperament, sounding a sort of prophetic strain.

Her account of her early life, with its many curious supernormal happenings, is very interesting and leads to the strange "inner" biography of her later years, when she claims to have come into familiar contact with the world beyond. Strange experiences, intimations, foreshadowings have come to her and still come.

Ideas reached her as words and warnings (now supposed spirits such as no doubt William Blake felt and saw about himself). Chiefest of her experiences is the reviewing of her "Outside Documents," ten thousand words written without an alteration in forty hours. These are an intricate series of statements purporting to have been dictated by a certain Judge Evelyn, and they describe a series of bureaus providing for an organized effort to rescue the land from monopolies, lifting up the standard of "the chosen people of God—the workers."

These documents, forming a sort of utopian constitution of a new order, authorize the Unseens to embark in enterprises necessary to promote this cause and to provide funds and friends or it; and this has been the object of Miss Jones's efforts ever since 1870, when the call came to her.

To seven means for this Crusade and for her Reformatory for Women, Miss Jones has now, accordingly, practicable projects, both divulged to her from the Unseens. One is a method (often tested in various cities, approved by experts and now well protected by government patents) of preserving fruit, meats, etc., by the use of a vacuum. Another invention, now taken up for men of experience and national standing, is a method of burning white petroleum instead of coal in the heating of boilers.

Now the curious thing is that Miss Jones, previous to certain psychic intimations, was not a trance medium nor a money-taking medium, is said to have known nothing of machinery or invention, yet she is now an expert in installing and running her own machines.

Women's clubs might do well to look into her "Pure Food Vacuum Canning Industry," as Miss Jones has provided in her will that this is to be organized as a cooperative industry, devoted to the interests of working women of all degrees of ability, and to the betterment of the world's food; a part of the proceeds to go perpetually to the reformation of women in Van Ness Springs, in Kansas.

Consumption seems to have carried off many of Miss Jones's friends. One discovers that her psychic advisers did not long ago tell her of the fresh air cure that is now saving so many who once would have doomed to swift decline.

The book is written with vivacity and style, with brilliance, and it is full of the dancing sunshine of a mind well stored with facts and fancy. The earnestness of the book, its strange blending of the visionary and the practical, the intense desire of the author to benefit the workers of the world—all these things conspire to make Miss Jones's "Psychic Autobiography" a unique volume.

Graves Publishing Company, New York. $1.00.

Marion Harland Summons Back the Dead

"WHERE GHOSTS WALK" is the well fitting title which Marion Harland (Mrs. Virginia Terhune) has chosen for her series of blended travel, history and literature. The second of these pleasant volumes sweeps in the haunts of certain well-known characters, such as the Ladies of Llangollen, Sir Philip Sidney, Amy Robsart, George Herbert, Laurence Jos-sophine and Mary Stuart.

Mrs. Terhune's plan is to visit and describe the homes of these persons of importance, relieving the events that took place and person notable. The result is a picturesque and dramatic narrative, reliable by a seeing eye and by a mind well stored with reading and reflection. One seldom finds a book so thorough, yet so spirited and poetic. Mrs. Terhune gives some of these half-forgotten women a new lease of life and light. E. M.

Bohemia and the Czechs

WILL S. MONROE is right when he maintains that a country at once as old and as new as Bohemia has claims on the travel lover and the student when he asserts that before the appearance of his book descriptive work there was no adequate general work of Bohemian travel in English. His idea has been to write not merely a complete history of Bohemia, but to give a general survey of the civilization of the Bohemians with its historical and social development. In the dividuous and comprehensive and interesting book one chapter is given to a topographic survey of Bohemia, and its characteristics and three chapters to the important City of Prague. The capital is developed in the spa resorts, another to the provincial towns and a third to Moravia and Silesia. The beginnings of the Bohemian nation and its transition from paganism to Christianity are treated in the second chapter, and the third is given over to the reign of Charles IV. and the rise of Bohemia in literature and art. The religious and moral revolution, the wars of the fifteenth century and the cessation of Bohemian renaissance fills the seventh chapter, and two chapters are given to the people of Bohemia—the Bohemians on the one hand, the Germans and Jews on the other. Two chapters are devoted to the material side of the country, industry, agriculture and commerce, while the rest of the book treats of social institutions, religion, schools and universities, language and literature, painting and sculpture and the creative arts. So it will be seen that Mr. Monroe has been thorough and exhaustive in his inquiry, and that his work is truly a valuable handbook of information concerning a wonderful country of interest to the traveler.

"Bohemia and the Czechs," by Will S. Monroe. L. C. Page & Co.

"The Airship Boys in the Barren Lands"

(I turned this book over to an eleven-year-old boy, and here is his report on it.—E. M.)

THOSE who followed Ned Napier and Alan Hope, together with their chum, Bob Russel, in H. L. Saylor's book, "The Airship Boys Due North," will now be pleased to see these old characters (and some new ones) between the covers of a recent volume entitled "The Airship Boys in the Barren Lands." In this story the airship boys defeat their old rival, L. P. Hayes, in a race for a gigantic mine of copper. Incidentally, they learn the secret of the white Eskimo, the story of the lone survivor of the Sir John Franklin Polar expedition.

This is one of the best books of the present serie of four. It is bound and formly with others of its name. The next in the set will have the unique title, "The Airship Boys in Finance, or the Fight of the Flying Cow." One may say of it, "If it equals 'The Airship Boys in the Barren Lands' it will be good indeed.

New Poems

MR. RICHARD LE GALLIENNE is so artistic a prose-man, so truly the poet in all these pages of his "Prose Fancies," that we wonder that he ever feels the need of seeking the adornment of verse. Still, there are moods perhaps too delicate, too fleeting even for the ethereal prose, and therefore certain creations of his fancy find vent and voice in books of rhyme, his "New Poems" being the latest offering to the Muse.

In nearly all these new pages one feels the airy lure of the flight. We are borne through scented gardens, carried over silver seas, dipped into rosy sunsets.

Mr. Le Gallienne is an autumnic poet; he has done his valiant part in building up the beauty of the world. Here is the fine symbol under which he sees the mystery we call life:

Life is that doomed, mysterious sad-eyed flower
That through the comic prairie, like a rose,
Pushes its clever stem, and for an hour
In the slow sunset shows its crimson bloom.

No lover of beauty can fail to be touched by the rare delicacy of "The Ballad of the Dead Lover" and "The Wife From Fairy Land." But we find the more militant Le Gallienne note in this sonnet that swings like a sword in battle:

ON SOME RECENT EDITIONS OF OSCAR WILDE

Who, loving beauty much, loved life too well;
Therefore to-night he hides his head in hell;
Those are the gates and ghosts he goes;
But we, who love not beauty, we provide
In the world's end, and pose in buckram-coat,
The sculptured stone, foul groping where it falls—
Ruin for fit grave, gaping for tomb.
Maggots to the decay of the divine,
Gods of the filthy mind, we let him die!
You spare your little verses on his name,
You, who now sing and gilding in his fame,
Relating the sockets of the crumbled;
But I, who loved him, will not make no sign.

The Beautiful Queen

JOANNA I., Queen of Naples, ascended the throne at the age of sixteen, and held it for forty years. Among the eminent men at her cultured court were Petrarch and Boccaccio. Four times married, she survived the ninth husband, the brother of husband number one. An extremely beautiful woman, some biographers have given her a good character, others have gone so far the other way as to implicate her in murder. Probably we shall never know how good or bad she was, but the present careful volume is sufficient for the needs of those desirous of learning about her and her troubled times.

Range and Trail

IN this book for boys Mr. Sabin continues the story of the "Bar B Boys." Such stories as come from this author's pen are most useful in putting grit and stick-to-it-ive-ness into the boy nature. Good clean air, rugged old mountains and their denizens, lively narrative—these elements are the sort to use in bracing up the lad for the rush of the future. "Sissy books" won't do it all. Mr. Sabin knows it, and the boys know it. J. V. C.

"RANGE AND TRAIL," by Edwin L. Sabin. Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.

"The Aeroplane Express"

(Here is another book reported upon as follows by my young reviewer.—E. M.)

THE third book in Ashton Lamar's Aeroplane Series is entitled "The Aeroplane Express." It gives us the story of a boy who goes to Utah to carry messages for a mining company. How he discovered the secret cave of the lost Indians of the Sink Hole is related in this book.

The fourth volume in this series will be named "The Boy Aeronauts Cruise for Flying for Fun."

Reilly & Britton Co., Publishers, Chicago. 60 cents.

Old Verses Revived

IN "The Daisy." By Ruth E. Robson.

The author has carefully selected a number of the customary stories in verse of one hundred years ago and has illustrated them with sixteen full-page illustrations in soft, delicate colors, besides numerous black and white drawings and vignettes. J. V. C.

"THE DAISY," by Ruth A. Robson, H. M. Caldwell Company.
